Budget's a wallet walloper

Other budget stories on pages 16, 17, 18, 20, 23

Higher gasoline prices because of a federal government tax increase will reverberate through the B.C. economy.

Simply put, it means we're all going to have to pay more for food and almost all consumer goods, say industry and labor spokesmen.

Companies directly involved in transportation, including ferries, airlines, trains, buses and taxicabs, all face significantly higher costs.

The 18-cent increase in the price of a gallon of gas (15 cents for commercial transportation companies) will affect everything which is transported, heated or made from gasoline and oil.

And the $4 a barrel price hike for oil by Oct. 1, 1980, means that a whole range of products will zoom in price.

As an example, that new living room carpet at $16.95 a square yard will be $19.66 in 12 months and as high as $26.10 by 1983 as price of oil continues to climb.

Vinyl floor coverings, counter tops, plastic garbage bags, ballpoint pens, antifreeze, moulded plastic hockey skates, tape cassettes, all will cost more.

Paint for the living room that now sells for $21 a gallon will go up to $24 next year and will be close to $33 within three years.

R. J. Addington, president of Kelly Douglas, B.C.'s largest food wholesaler, said that the price of food is largely determined by the price of fuel.

"Raw materials have to be handled about 20 times, and each time transport is involved," Addington said.

Addington said there may be no immediate increase in the cost of food but prices will inevitably rise as the increased transportation costs add up.

B.C. Federation of Agriculture manager Ray Wessel said the agriculture industry is the highest user of fossil fuels in Canada with consumption approximately 20 per cent of the industry's cost of production.

"Aside from the direct cost to farmers, there will be a multiplier effect when you add in trucking and railway costs," he said.

He said what it means is that consumers will pay one way or the other for the increases and in some cases, it could mean more than just a 20 per cent increase in prices.

Wessel said southern Vancouver Island and Fraser Valley farmers who use oil or natural gas will be hardest hit.

Les Raphael, B.C. manager of the Retail Council of Canada, said the effect on the consumer "obviously is to eat his disposable income."

"(The gas hike) will probably go right through the economy," Raphael said. "The increase in the price of energy will increase prices. Then you have a reaction from the forces of labor to try to catch up. The thing is inflationary."

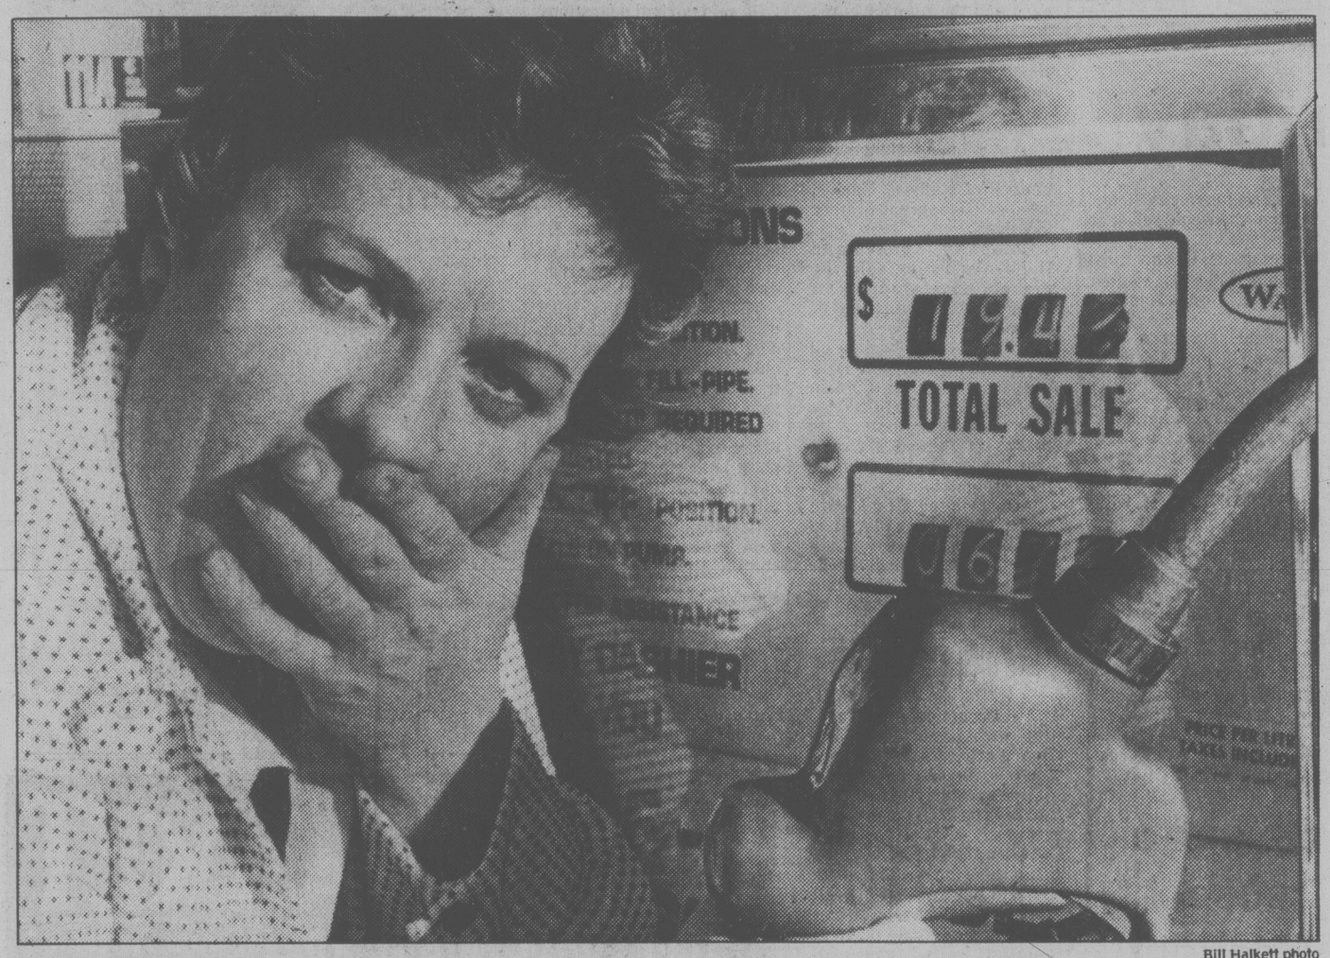

Raphael noted Finance Minister John Crosbie also announced that he is increasing domestic oil prices closer to world levels.

The move "may strengthen the Canadian dollar somewhat, which may make imports cheaper," he said, but a stronger Canadian dollar would make Canada's exports more expensive and less appealing to trading partners.

Vancouver-based tax consultant Nick Geer said transportation costs are a major factor in all consumer goods.

Opposition blasts Tories' 'cruel joke'

UNSPEAKABLE HORROR of higher gas prices hit home today for Gail Berry, of 243 Gorge Road East, when she stopped in at Parkdale Shell to fill up. She and every other driver awoke today to find price of a gallon of gas had jumped 25 cents, thanks to excise tax boost announced by Finance Minister John Crosbie. New price is only a start — we'll pay $1.90 a gallon by 1984.

The budget that stole Canada's Christmas

Times News Services

OTTAWA (CP) — The minority Progressive Conservative government's first budget came under searing attack today from opposition MPs, business leaders and politicians across the country.

Commons opposition members called it a mammoth revenue grab and 'the budget that stole Christmas.'

"It is a body blow to the Canadian people," said New Democratic Party finance critic Bob Rae.

Liberal Finance critic Herb Gray described it as Finance Minister John Crosbie's biggest joke yet.

"It is a cruel joke on the Canadian people," he told the Commons moments after Crosbie read his first budget speech.

Debate on the budget was to begin today and an NDP vote of non-confidence condemning the budget will be held Thursday night. A similar vote instigated by a Liberal motion will not be held until the New Year.

All party leaders, even the Tory-supporting Social Crediter Fabien Roy, castigated the budget.

Roy said he disagrees with the whole budget, especially the 25-cent excise tax on gasoline. Roy said he might recommend rejection by his party in the Commons.

Without the support of Roy's five-member party, Clark's minority government could well go down to defeat.

Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau and NDP Leader Ed Broadbent called it regressive and said they will recommend their caucuses vote against it.

Gray said the budget is no budget at all. It was based on an oil and gas agreement that does not exist and an energy tax that does not exist.

Borrowing a phrase Crosbie used last week, Gray described the budget as a "squeasley, measley" offering to the Canadian public and said it would lead to a two-per-cent increase in inflation, an increase of one per cent in the unemployment rate and a one-point reduction in the Gross National Product.

The MP for Windsor West called the budget a revenue grab that the government is trying to disguise as a strategy for energy self-sufficiency.

"It is the budget that stole Christmas," Rae said. "It is a triumph of dogma over common sense."

Gray and Rae agreed that the Conservatives were overly concerned with cutting Canada's deficit and should be putting more emphasis on making sure Canadians are employed.

Trudeau said the government shows itself to obsessed with the size of the deficit to the extent that it is increasing inflation and unemployment.

He said increased oil prices and a surcharge on corporations' incomes will be passed on to the lower- and middle-income Canadians. These measures were a consequence of the government jamming through Parliament its legislation to allow deduction of mortgage interest and property tax from income tax.

To help home-owners the government had to raise $2.8 billion "but to pay for it they have to raise oil prices."

In Quebec, Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau slammed the new budget, calling on Ottawa to withdraw its excise tax on gasoline and hand over the field to Quebec.

In a statement to the national assembly, Parizeau said the budget effectively eliminates federalist arguments that Quebec benefits from Confederation.

"What Quebec has not paid to the Ayatollahs, it will now have to pay to Ottawa."

Parizeau termed the budget "unjustified and damaging for the economic prosperity of all citizens. But it is particularly odious for Quebec."

The finance minister said he would introduce a motion

Dollar-a-gallon gas is old history as 'new era' budget hits hard

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Thousands of Canadians who raced for the gas pumps Tuesday in a last-minute frenzy to beat the federal budget today watched dollar-a-gallon gasoline disappear into history. The country woke up this morning to an 18-cent-a-gallon price hike, with further increases just months away.

Finance Minister John Crosbie also hit consumers in his first budget with increased taxes on cigarettes, liquor and wine.

It was a budget of few surprises, packed with tough measures to cure the country of its reputation as the worst gas-guzzler in the industrialized world.

"It is the first budget of a new era," Crosbie told the Commons as he unveiled his program to drag the country — kicking and screaming if necessary — out of its doldrums of serious unemployment, persistent inflation, profligate energy use and near-stagnation.

The measures the government promised to include in the budget to help ease the country into the painful age of expensive energy were there — but most remained either vague or well in the future.

The expected improvements in the country's home insulation program, for example, have not yet been negotiated with the provinces, although Crosbie is prepared to set aside the necessary funds.

And the single major relief measure in the budget, a tax refund designed to protect low and middle income Canadians from the brunt of soaring energy prices, does not come into effect until July, 1980. Even then, the tax break will be introduced at half-strength.

On paper, the government is offering a refundable energy tax credit to all families with annual incomes of less than $21,380 of $80 per adult and $30 per child.

In fact, however, the minimum any taxpayer can claim next year is half the credit. The government felt it could hold off introducing the measure until next summer, when consumers will first start to feel the impact of significant energy price jumps.

The budget confirmed that the government is determined to secure agreement with Alberta to raise the price of oil by $4 a barrel next year and $4.50 thereafter, but also made it clear that no such accord has so far been reached.

Crosbie, who has made no secret of his annoyance with the federal government's seeming inability to reach agreement with Alberta, reluctantly acknowledged that his budget had to be written on the assumption that the federal government will get its way.

But all that is firmly on paper at this point is that oil

Colombia quake toll rising

BOGOTA (AP) — A strong earthquake and resulting tidal waves wiped out a half-dozen villages along Colombia's southwest Pacific coast Wednesday, killing at least 118 persons, provincial authorities said. Many people were reported missing.

The pre-dawn quake, centred in the ocean off the Columbia-Ecuador border area, was felt 640 kilometres away in Quito, the Ecuadoran capital.

Thousands rushed from their beds in panic.

Officials said in radio-telephone reports they fear the toll of dead and injured will go much higher as rescue teams reach isolated vilages.

Among the hardest hit was the fishing village of Charco where at least 62 persons were killed and more than 350 injured, the police and Colombian fish and game officials said in radio-telephone reports. Most of the dead and injured were women and children, they said.

The majority of the houses in the town of 4,000 were built on stilts over a lake and were knocked into the water by the earthquake, the waves and aftershocks, the officials reported. About 70 per cent of the village's homes disappeared and the rest were heavily damaged, the officials said.

"It was terrible, it lasted nearly an hour," said a short-wave radio operator from Charco.

"Everything is knocked down," said Rev. Jose Pablo, a Roman Catholic priest reached in Charco. "The few houses that are left standing are seriously damaged."

Police in stricken areas called out auxiliaries and relief efforts were launched to help the homeless. Searchers poked through collapsed dwellings for survivors.

Twenty other towns in the area were rocked and the quake churned up two-metre waves that wrecked a pier on a prison island, officials said.

The quake measured from 7.7 to 8.1 on the Richter scale.

The San Francisco quake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the Richter scale.

Oil fear pushes gold to $451

LONDON (AP) — Gold hit a high of $451 an ounce in Zurich today as the U.S. dollar came under pressure on European money markets over fears of an increase in the oil price.

The metal opened in London and Zurich, Europe's major bullion markets, just below the previous all-time high of $447, recorded in London at the close of trading Tuesday.

But by lunchtime bullion had advanced to $451 in Zurich, where gold closed Tuesday at $445.50. London's major bullion houses "fixed" the price for the morning trading session at $449.75.

Fears of a 30-per-cent increase in the price of oil next week helped push gold up and depress the U.S. currency on European foreign exchanges. Gold is an investor's haven in times of monetary uncertainty.

In Tokyo, however, worries over oil seemed to have a reverse effect, and the dollar strengthened. Japan imports about 99 per cent of its oil and the yen tends to suffer more than the dollar amid gloomy oil news.

Whereabouts of 20 hostages a puzzle

Times News Services

WASHINGTON (AP) — State department officials said Tuesday they cannot account for the whereabouts of about 20 U.S. hostages in Iran and that it is possible they are being brainwashed in preparation for a trial.

The officials spoke in reaction to a Monday night television interview with one of the hostages, Marine Cpl. William Gallegos of Pueblo, Colo.

Gallegos, in an interview filmed by Iranians and broadcast by NBC television, said the other hostages he has seen are well. But he said he has not seen about 20 of the 50 people who have been held since Iranian militants seized the U.S. Embassy on Nov. 4.

Officials said it is possible that the remaining 20 hostages are being held elsewhere in the embassy compound under conditions similar to those described by Gallegos.

But they said it is also possible that the Iranians have singled out those hostages they intend to put before courts on espionage charges and are brainwashing or otherwise coercing them into making confessions.

Meanwhile, the students holding the hostages say they know nothing about foreign observers interviewing their captives, promised by Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh, and that Ghotbzadeh doesn't speak for them.

"We are not here to confirm or deny anybody's statement," a student leader said of Ghotbzadeh's pledge. "We have not been informed about any meeting arranged with the hostages. If anything comes up, we'll announce it ourselves and nobody can be our spokesman."

The foreign minister made the promise at a news conference Tuesday.

Tehran Radio said today that Senator Edward Kennedy, a critic of the shah, sent a letter to Ayatollah Khomeini expressing support for his revolution and asking permission to visit Iran. But a spokesman for the senator denied he has had any contact "whatsoever" with the ayatollah "or anyone in the Iranian government."

Elsewhere, Khomeini's domestic difficulties appeared to be increasing.

He announced that he was sending an investigative commission to clamp down on what he called "anarchic" elements among his revolutionary guards who he said were seizing government land and buildings.

The ayatollah did not say where the land grabs were taking place.

There was no indication that a peace mission Khomeini sent to northwest Iran was making any progress toward quieting the rebellion of the Azaris, the ethnic Turks who seized control of Tabriz.

U.S. State Secretary Cyrus Vance, meanwhile, wound up a two-day swing through London, Paris, Rome and Bonn, and an aide reported "very strong support" for U.S. efforts to free the hostages.

In Brussels, Canadian Defence Minister Allan McKinnon says he thinks all NATO allies including Canada will back economic sanctions against Iran to secure release of the American hostages in Tehran.

McKinnon told a news conference today he believes "it is the way to resolve the problem — to put pressure on Iran from an alliance such as this."

Back in the U.S., the Carter administration says it will probably will appeal a federal judge's ruling that it cannot deport Iranian students illegally living in the United States.

U.S. District Judge Joyce Hens Green ruled Tuesday that the administration's program, launched after the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, violates the equal-protection clause of the U.S. constitution by singling out Iranians for deportation.

In another development, Fiji said today it is willing to provide sanctuary for the deposed shah of Iran.

Prime Minister Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara said was asked at a news conference how his government would respond to a request that the outsted shah, undergoing medical treatment in the United States, go to Fiji.

"Personally I think the man — whatever wrong he has committed — has been abandoned by everyone except the United States," he replied.

$1M art decision Friday

Vancouver industrialist George Clark will make a decision Friday on the provincial government's $1 million offer for 19 of the 27 Emily Carr paintings he is selling.

That was the word given Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe when he called Clark on Tuesday, a ministry spokesman said today.

Gallery owner Karen Keenlyside, who is acting for Clark, said she is also negotiating with a Montreal buyer who represents a major corporation.

Ald. Robin Blencoe, who spurred the effort to get B.C. to buy the collection, said he is gloomy about the prospect of losing the collection.

"It's a sad day as far as I'm concerned if we lose them," he said.

"We've missed the boat it would appear. How often do we get a collection of 27 Emily Carr paintings up for sale? Within a year we'll be kicking ourselves."

Wolfe said Monday the government's final offer was $1 million for 19 of the paintings, $600,000 to be put up by an anonymous Victoria woman who would select one for herself.

Keenlyside, however, said Tuesday Clark is adamant that the paintings remain as a unit.

Blencoe said all the feedback he's had from art dealers, collectors and other experts is that the collection should remain intact.

He agreed that some of the individual paintings may be overpriced but said the whole collection is priceless.

Edythe Hembroff-Schleicher, a friend of Emily Carr's and a former tenant in the artist's apartment house on Simcoe Street, said she thought the price was high.

She also said Emily Carr would have found the public haggling repugnant.

"They're inflating the dollar value and losing touch with the intrinsic value."

BCR wildcat halts trains to interior

SQUAMISH (CP) — B.C. Rail traffic between Squamish and the Interior came to a standstill Tuesday when employees refused to cross a picket line set up by trainmen protesting the progress of contract talks.

The wildcat strike, which started Monday night without the sanction of the Joint Council of Railway Unions, is expected to spread to other locations.

Company spokesman Hugh Armstrong said the pickets have stopped all trains from moving out of Squamish.

Traffic is also backed up on Canadian National Railways, which has been switching trains to BCR lines at Prince George since its bridge at Second Narrows was knocked out in October by a freighter.

Armstrong said a selective embargo has been placed on the shipment of any perishable goods, explosives or dangerous commodities that must pass through Squamish.

He said normal operations are continuing at all yards north of Lillooet and at the North Vancouver yard where the railway transfers CNR goods to the waterfront.

The joint council, representing 2,200 employees, is in a legal position to strike but promised the railway Saturday it would give 48 hours notice so that an embargo could be placed on perishable goods.

The council said the strike was led by a group of dissident workers who have decided to take matters into their own hands. One official said the workers are refusing to communicate with the union executive and at this point both sides appear uncertain as to their next move.

Armstrong said the company has asked the unions to end the strike and return to the bargaining table.

Dispute unsolved

An informal meeting Tuesday with Labor Relations Board officials failed to resolve a dispute over chief officers substituting for masters on B.C. Ferry Corp. vessels.

It appeared a formal board hearing would have to be held but an LRB official said today further informal meetings may take place in an effort to find some solution.

The B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union forced the issue last week by ordering its officers to no longer substitute for masters because the union felt their compensation was inadequate.

The union threatened to discipline any officer who ignored the order. The ferry corporation accused the union of irresponsible behavior and said the officers' refusal to substitute for masters on the 33 major ferries could lead to cancellation of sailings.

8-year-old suspect caught

The Crown prosecutor must decide whether charges will be laid against an eight-year-old boy accused of robbing two seven-year-old girls Monday afternoon.

Officers located the boy Tuesday after the girls reported to police they had been robbed of $7 at knifepoint while walking in the 2100-block Chambers.

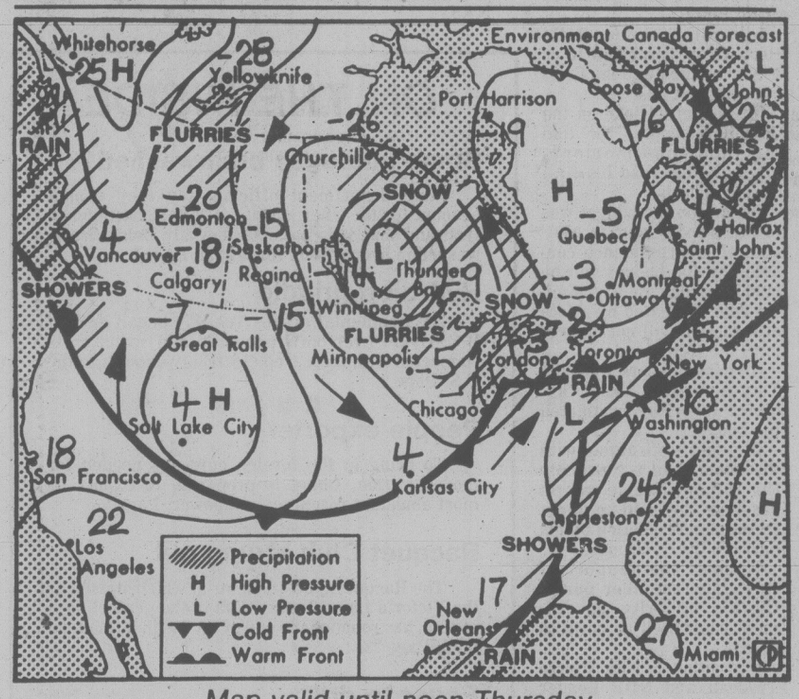

A police spokesman said officers have spoken to the boy and his mother and feel the robbery was an isolated incident.

None of the money was recovered.

The spokesman said the law allows a criminal charge to be laid against a child between seven and 14, although it is rarely done.

Hydro export cost queried

Bonner strikes back

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro chairman Robert Bonner has taken a swipe at environmental groups opposing Hydro's application to increase electricity exports to the United States.

Several environmental groups are appearing at National Energy Board hearings at Vancouver into the Crown corporation's application to renew its export licences.

In a speech Tuesday to a Vancouver service club, Bonner said debate has been enlarged while decision has been diminished. He said scarcity is being unwittingly promoted, even in the face of plenty.

Bonner said that sooner or later, for the good of Canada, the country must get its energy assets in gear.

Hydro is applying to export a maximum of 10 billion kilowatt hours of electricity a year to the U.S. until 1984.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Scientific Pollution and Environmental Control Society has asked B.C. Hydro to provide information on the environmental and social cost of its plan to increase electricity exports to the U.S.

The society was appearing Tuesday at the first day of hearings by the National Energy Board into Hydro's application to renew its licences to export the electricity.

It is concerned that if Hydro boosts its power generating capacity to service American markets, Canadians will end up paying the environmental costs that could result. And the society wants to know if the price charged to Americans for the electricity will include environmental costs.

Meanwhile, in spite of objections from Hydro, the Council of Yukon Indians has been accepted as an intervener at the hearings.

Council lawyer Don Rosenbloom said the Indians are worried about possible Hydro dams on the Liard River in northern B.C., which would flood several thousand square miles of land in the Yukon.

Hydro lawyer Bill Mitchell said the issue of dams on the Liard was not relevant to the inquiry. The export licences cover only generating plants up to and including the Revelstoke Dam, he said.

However, after several minutes of private discussion, the three-member board ruled that it would accept the council as an intervener.

Hydro is applying to export to the U.S. a maximum of 10 billion kilowatt hours of electricity a year for five years until 1984. Three billion kilowatt hours would be guaranteed power and seven billion kilowatts would be interruptible power — power on which B.C. residents and industry would have first claim before any was transmitted to the U.S.

Other interventions are expected from the B.C. Council of Forest Industries, representing members who are heavy consumers of electricity; Port Moody, which is concerned about Hydro's Burrard thermal generating station nearby; and Cominco Ltd. and Westcoast Transmission Co., firms which believe their interest will be affected.

Opposition energy critic Chris D'Arcy (NDP — Rossland-Trail) said the New Democrats are intervening "because there's no provincial agency empowered to review the questionable course on which the government and Hydro are proceeding."

Tel rebate cuts service?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The $7 million rebate that B.C. Telephone Co. has been ordered to pay to its subscribers means cutbacks in customer service, says Bob Donnelly, president of the Telecommunications Workers Union of B.C.

"Basically, they have reduced all possible service to the customer by reducing all but essential overtime and out-of-town work assignments," Donnelly said Tuesday.

Company spokesman Keith Matthews said the rebate does not affect customer service and is not related to current spending restraints by management.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission ruling Nov. 7 means B.C. Tel subscribers will get a 25- to 30-per-cent rebate on December telephone bills. The company was ordered to pay back excess profits it collected in 1978 while it was under federal anti-inflation guidelines.

Donnelly said the ruling has meant management at B.C. is "cutting corners any place they can" without violating the agreement between the union and the company.

Reductions include overtime cutbacks, temporary employee layoffs and fewer out-of-town trips and telephone installations, he said.

But Matthews said the rebate money would normally be used to maintain and improve the telephone service through capital construction programs.

Fiery crash kills two in truck

DELTA (CP) — Two men died Tuesday when their pickup truck burst into flames after it was in collision with a B.C. Hydro bus here.

Five passengers in the bus suffered minor injuries.

No names were released.

Either mother or baby in custody

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Authorities were forced to keep either a six-month-old child or his mother in custody to ensure the safety of the child, a Surrey RCMP constable said Tuesday.

Constable Bruce Duncan was testifying during the first day of an inquest into the death of Camilla Simonetto, who was found hanging in a barn Oct. 11 after disappearing from Surrey Memorial Hospital.

Mrs. Simenetto had been under psychiatric care after she jumped with her son, Kevin, into a backyard well on Sept. 21.

Duncan said it was decided that either Mrs. Simonetto must remain in hospital or the child would be taken away by social workers.

He said if the mother had left the hospital and had been reunited with her child, then she would have been arrested and charged with attempted murder.

The baby had been taken once by social workers but was returned after intervention by then-human resources minister Bill Vander Zalm.

Later, family physician Dr. John Scarfo backed down on a plan to give Mrs. Simonetto a weekend pass after he was told the child would be taken back into custody.

Duncan said social workers, backed by police, again tried to take the child when the mother disappeared from the hospital. But the child's father, Romeo Simonetto, refused to say where Kevin was.

Simonetto said that when his wife jumped into the well, Kevin had been fretful with colic and with a cast to correct a foot problem.

He said his wife had been getting quieter and appeared distressed when her milk dried up and she could no longer breastfeed Kevin.

Trapper found dead on line

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Joe Carty, president of the B.C. Trappers Association was found dead on his trapline Tuesday. The 63-year-old trapper and guide apparently had a heart attack.

Harsh but worthy

The first Conservative budget in 16 years is the toughest the country has seen for at least that long, but it deserves support.

Although there are areas that leave much to be desired, Finance Minister John Crosbie has declared war on what is believed to be the heart of the Canadian economic dilemma — a spending deficit that has been piling up at roughly $10 billion a year. To fight inflation is to fight the deficit and to do that the government either raises more money through taxes or cuts government expenditures. Crosbie went only half-way.

The finance minister said that Canada has the highest deficit-to-Gross National Product ratio of any country in the western world. He has predicted that that it can be cut in half by 1984, but it will be done at the expense of the taxpayer, not at the expense of the civil service.

During the election campaign the Tories promised to reduce the civil service by 60,000 over the next four years. In a dramatic about face, Crosbie now says that federal government spending will increase at 10 per cent per year. Given the inflation forecast of 10 per cent a year for the foreseeable future, the finance minister says that means no growth. That's a far cry from a reduction.

Few people expected a stimulative budget, and they were right. Through increased costs for energy, cigarettes, liquor, Unemployment Insurance, a reduction in oil and gas exploration tax write-offs and a five per cent surtax on corporate income, the government expects to gather an additional $3 billion.

On the other hand, Crosbie's background papers detail how more than two-thirds of that money will be put back into the economy.

To a certain extent the government has recognized that middle and lower income people will be the hardest hit by increasing energy costs. The budget details an Energy Tax Rebate plan under which families earning less that $21,000 a year will be allowed to deduct a maximum of $80 per adult and $30 per child. The plan will be phased in over two years.

The energy rebate plan may blunt the criticism of the government's mortgage deductibility program. Most homeowners are in an income bracket that makes them ineligible for the energy tax credit. The government is seen to be softening tax increases to all income levels.

One of the more interesting aspects of this budget is that in the areas of highest tax increases the average Canadian has some choice. Alterations in lifestyle — using less gasoline, liquor and cigarettes — can soften the impact on personal income. There would be no such choice in an across-the-board increase in income tax.

The biggest disappointment was the glaring hole left by the lack of agreement between the federal government and Alberta on the division of money from wellhead oil price increases during the next four years. Crosbie has speculated that Ottawa will receive $17 billion from a $17.50 increase in the price of a barrel of oil by 1984

On that he has rested his government's hopes of financing exploration and the development of alternative energy sources. Gas prices will rise at 14 cents a year over and above the excise tax, but the public as yet has no guarantees the money will be used to attain oil self-sufficiency.

The business community seems in general agreement that it can live with the budget. Alterations in the tax status for spouses employed in small busineesses, short-term development bond credits to offset high interest rates, and incentives of investment in Canadian companies leave little room for outrage.

Labor leaders across the nation have rallied in opposition, saying the budget will aggravate unemployment and worsen the inflation rate. However, $250 million has been set aside for an employer tax credit plan that Crosbie says should create 100,000 jobs.

Clearly this budget, brought down at a time when the United States is believed slipping into recession, will have a short-term negative impact on the Canadian economy. But the country has been ignoring reality for too long. The line has to be drawn sometime. Better to do it now.

Submersion subversion?

Surely this can't be a game of 'I've got a secret.'

International Hydrodynamics Ltd. (Hyco) of North Vancouver is, after seven months, still waiting for an export permit from the Canadian government to outfit four deep-water submersibles for the Soviet Union's National Science Institute. The titanium hulls for the one manned submarine and three remote-controlled underwater craft are being supplied by the Soviets and Hyco is adding the electronics.

Company president Mack Thompson says Hyco bid on the $19.5 million dollar contract four years ago, after the company had supplied the Soviets with two similiar craft.

Thompson says he believes the export is being held up by the defense ministry out of concern the devices may have stategic military value.

Both the federal and provincial governments have been expounding at great length the potential of high-technology industry in Canada, especially in the field of marine development. Hyco would seem a perfect example.

Thompson says he is danger of losing the contract to a company in another country if the permit is not awarded soon. If the government cannot decide in seven months whether Hyco might be an unknowing partner to subversion, then it would seem the company can't have much of a secret.

What fun is this?

While I'm sure this letter will bring down upon me the wrath of a horde of nostalgia buffs, I must take issue with your recent editorial, The Maggie is not a jetfoil (Nov. 29).

While a jetfoil may not be the best answer for tourist traffic between Victoria and Seattle, I suspect that an unbiased survey of the people who had to endure conditions on the Princess Marguerite during some of her crowded summer voyages would indicate that few ended the voyage with warm feelings about the ship. Their mood might have been affected by the 90-minute wait in line that was necessary to make sure they got on the ship for the return trip. It also may have reflected the discomfort of a crowded and unventilated lounge, or the chill of a four-hour trip seated in a draughty outside corridor facing salt-encrusted windows.

Your editorial mentions that "at least half the fun . . . lies in the ship itself, its nostalgia, its food, the opportunities it provides to wander about and view the scenery from deckside." What nonsense! The charm of the ship has been ruined by crowding seats into every conceivable space, few people manage to get into the lounges or eating places, and many end up standing in line for half the voyage on the windy afterdeck, for the dubious privilege of buying a plastic-wrapped sandwich and coffee in a styrofoam cup.

There are a few people who "wander about and view the scenery." They are the ones who can't find a place to sit. The others are afraid to move as they are bombarded with frequent announcements telling the wanderers that no seats can be saved and that if they see a bag or coat on a seat they should remove it and sit down. The pleasure of my August trip back from Seattle was marred by a shouting match between two tearful passengers. Each thought they should be able to sit where they could see the scenery.

There is no doubt that nostalgia sells and that the Maggie fits well with the image favored by Victoria's tourist promoters. But when she is replaced, let's keep the facts in mind. I suspect that many of the people who made their first visit to Victoria on the Marguerite came back the second time by some other means. — G. L. Kristianson, 5055 Catalina Terrace.

Familiar story

A recent newsletter from Donald Munro to his constituents in the federal riding of Esquimalt-Saanich speaks of his reasons for favouring the Canadian overland route of the Alaska Highway Oil Pipeline in transporting American markets. Mr. Munro says his assessment of environmental hazards of pipelines has been significantly altered because of his visit with a parliamentary committee to Prudhoe Bay, and lists his chief impressions as purity of air there and seeing a caribou resting beside a pipeline.

Those of us who have lived for some years in the north are familiar with the forays made into that country during good weather by government officials and others who, after a few days with a tour laid on by government or industry, return to the south as first-hand experts. The kind of superficial assessment given by Mr. Munro is an insult to both the people of the north and the south. What kind of responsible government is this when representatives with a pitifully meagre understanding of the issues have a hand in making decisions that will affect the future of Canada for years to come?

And while the overland route, as Mr. Munro states, would eleminate the possibility of additional tankers in the Straits, thus avoiding environmental disasters on British Columbia's shores, doesn't the threat of such disasters in the north count?

And what of the true people of the north — the Yukon Indian people whose motto is "Together Today for our Children Tomorrow". It is after all their land. They will live, retire and die there. Yet Mr. Munro makes no mention of meeting them and discussing their concerns, as if they do not even exist. Is it any wonder that native people say the government never really listens to them or considers them except as a problem?

Mr. Munro also pays tribute in his newsletter to the late John Diefenbaker and his "Roads to Resources" program — that catchy phrase for a program that is causing more hardship. Last weekend I spoke to a young Dene (Indian) mother from Fort McPherson who said only seven caribou were taken last year for their entire community, and that they hold the construction of the Dempster Highway responsible. Now there is someone who should know. Also she said the influx of southern people travelling into the community by highway is having a devastating effect on their young people. "We are trying so hard to pass on our values to our children", she said, "But it's a losing battle because we aren't ready for all this. We need more time!" In political terms this is called "opening up the country". In human terms it's called "genocide". — Mavis M. Gillie, Project North (Vancouver).

Get federal help

Vancouver Island, like Canada's Atlantic provinces, is a disadvantaged area insofar as energy is concerned. It doesn't have a supply of cheap natural gas and many of its industries still use imported oil.

But there is a difference. The Atlantic provinces (including Quebec) are getting federal dollars to help them overcome the problem of distance. An oil line has already been built from Toronto to Montreal at federal expense. Now plans are being laid for a gas line to Halifax which will also be financed by the federal taxpayer.

The main idea in Eastern Canada seems to be that the consumer should pay the same price for Canadian oil and gas as consumers pay in southern Ontario. It won't matter where they live, the price will be the same. You and I, as federal taxpayers, will make up the difference. The object apparently is to ensure that everyone east of the Ottawa Valley will pay the same price for western oil and gas as Ontarians do now.

Much the same reasoning should apply to Vancouver Island. Canadians who live there should pay the same price for natural gas as the residents of Vancouver do.

In other words, Ottawa should pay a subsidy which would make the price of natural gas on Vancouver Island the same as it is on the B.C. mainland. To do this it must put up the capital cost of a pipeline across the Strait of Georgia. Then Vancouver Islanders would be treated on the same basis as Canadians living in the Atlantic Provinces. — Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

Art vs. lives

I am having a very difficult time getting excited about the prospect of Victoria and B.C. having 27 Emily Carr paintings at an expense of $1.3 million. I do, however, concede the woman who has offered $700,000 towards the purchase price must be commended for her generosity and worthy gesture.

I view our world: each day thousands of men, women and children dying from hunger and disease. I would humbly suggest this gift would be of far greater value in terms of the many hundreds of lives it could save. Is one life, let alone hundreds of lives, a fair exchange for 27 paintings most of us will never see?

I am willing to bet Emily would be the first to agree. — Hugh Hayward, 4922 Cordova Bay Road.

Government's tax share decreasing

Re: "Here we go again, Times, Dec. 4:

I must take exception to your statement that "at least the government is this year holding its own in the proportion of the total public school costs it will pay."

It is debatable whether this statement is true for the province and it is certainly not true for School District 61.

To illustrate my point, I offer the following analysis of school board budgets:

	1978	1979	1980*
Gross operating budget	$42,159,731	$45,054,434	$49,930,470
Basic Education Program (B.E.P.)	38,819,329	41,502,808	45,080,453
Basic Levy - Local Share	25,158,436	28,323,476	32,625,000
	(39.75 mills)	(41 mills)	(43.5 mills)
Basic Levy — Provincial share	13,660,893	13,179,332	12,455,453
Provincial share of B.E.P.	(35.19%)	(31.76%)	(27.6%)

*Proposed assumes a 7.7% increase in assessment and no changes in the final budget.

You will notice that not only has the government's share of the basic education program decreased in actual dollars from the last three years, it has also decreased in terms of percentage of the budget; all of this while inflation has increased by over 20 per cent. The declining enrolment since 1977 has been just over six per cent.

The government has managed to reduce its share of school board budgets by raising the basic levy which it forces local school districts to collect. From 1975 to 1979, the province increased the basic levy from 26 mills to 41 mills. This resulted in $10.3 million being shifted to the local taxpayer. This year's increase of 2½ mills will result in a further $1.8 million being shifted to the local taxpayer.

You will note that I use the term 'local taxpayer' and not 'homeowner'. The homeowner did experience increases in taxes as a result in the rise of the basic levy in the years from 1976 through to 1978. The increase in the homeowner grant in 1979 relieved the average homeowner from disproportionately sharing in the education costs. For example, the mythical average homeowner in Victoria owns a house assessed at $8,464 ($56,427 market value) and pays a school tax of $8.39 after the homeowner grant has been deducted. Homeowners living in houses valued at less than $56,[illegible] no school tax. Senior citizens living in homes valued at less than $84,000 pay no school tax. (In case there is some dispute as to whether or not the homeowner grant should be totally deducted from school taxes, you should note that it is a requirement of the homeowner grant act that your tax form reads "Provincial Homeowner Grant (applicable first to local school taxes and then to other levies)".

The result of all of this is that the business community in Victoria is bearing the brunt of the shifting in school taxes from the provincial to the local level. The homeowner is protected by the homeowner grant. The business community has no such protection.

It is obvious then that the government is continuing to decrease its share of the total tax for public school education. Our position is that the government should move to at least institute the recommendations of the McMath Commission which would have the local taxpayer picking up only 25 per cent of the tab for public school education. — Trevor L. Calkins, President, Greater Victoria Teachers Association.

TOM WICKER

The John Who? candidate

The Democrats nominated George Who? for president in 1972, and elected Jimmy Who? in 1976. Does that make it conceivable that the Republicans might nominate John Who? in 1980.

Well, if the Grand Old Party did nominate Rep. John Anderson of Illinois next year, the consensus among political buffs is that they just might elect him, too. Aye, but there's the rub! For the further consensus is that the party of Goldwater, Nixon, Thurmond and Reagan won't accept a man who bills himself as "the only moderate in the race."

And that, combined with Anderson's relative anonymity, leads to the conventional judgment on his campaign: "Anderson? Best man running on either side. But of course he can't win."

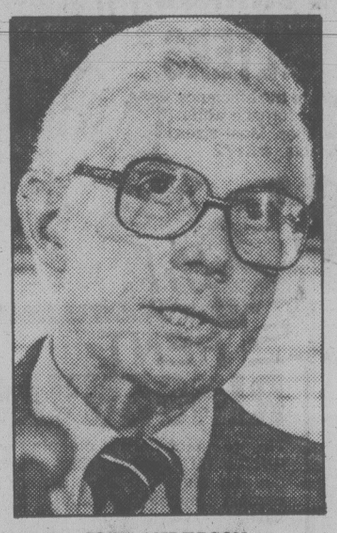

Could surprise

Conventional wisdom has been wrong before, and none other than Gerald Ford has observed of John Anderson that he "could surprise some people." His major asset is that he is the one Republican who could reasonably expect to win large numbers of Democrats to his support in a general election — particularly if a bloody Carter-Kennedy contest resulted in a Democratic split.

His weakness, of course, is born of that strength — it makes him an object of suspicion, as not "a mainstream Republican," among the party stalwarts who serve as delegates to the national convention. This debility has so far stuck him with the dread "can't win" label.

Anderson, a blithe soul conceded by all to be one of the best orators in the House, and who is its third-ranking Republican, tends to live above such pessimistic considerations. In an era when nominations derive more from primaries than from party strength (less so, admittedly, in the Republican than in the Democratic party), he thinks New Hampshire offers just the kind of opportunity he needs.

It is small enough that a candidate with limited means — very limited in Anderson's case — can still get through to the voters. It is a state with enough of a moderate Republican tradition that he might hope to win a substantial vote alone on that side of the fence, while his rivals divide up the conservative vote. And with so many Republicans splitting the total, Anderson hopes that might give him, say, a third-place finish.

JOHN ANDERSON
. . . maverick Republican

If that could be repeated or bettered in Massachusetts the following week, the anonymity problem would be solved and the "can't win" label would [illegible] he would then hope to break through in midwestern primaries in Wisconsin and his home state of Illinois — both of which, he notes, have elected Republican governors of views not dissimilar to his.

A pipedream? Not more so than the one that must have inspired Jimmy Carter four years ago. And if Carter's subsequent example of inexperience in the White House is cautionary, John Anderson is an experienced Washington hand who in 20 years in Congress has won much respect even from those who dispute his views. Were he not running for president, he could be a strong candidate to succeed Democratic Sen. Adlai Stevenson, who is retiring (and that's the more promising race many of Anderson's colleagues wish he would make).

Meanwhile, win, lose or draw, John Anderson, at 57 and looking younger, is serving the useful purpose of so many supposedly "can't win" candidates before him (a liberal Democrat I know, who says he always looks for an "honest loser," can't find one in his own party this time and is giving heavy thought to backing Anderson). That is, he is saying sensible things, putting forward innovative ideas, and letting the chips fall where they may.

He has just introduced, for example, legislation embodying his "50-50" gasoline tax scheme, first aired on the New York Times's Op-Ed page in August. It would impose a 50-cent-per-gallon tax on gasoline and diesel fuel, raising $61 billion a year; $46 billion of that would be used to cut workers' Social Security tax rate by 50 percent (actually from 6.13 to three per cent). That would be worth $626 a year to a single worker family earning $20,000 a year — enough to cover the tax on 1,252 gallons of gas.

Lower payroll tax

The other $13 billion in revenue would fund a reduction in the employer's payroll tax from 6.13 to five per cent — an anti-inflationary step (since the tax is usually passed through to prices) that would also preserve jobs. Not incidentally, the 50-50 scheme might conserve up to 10 percent of present gasoline consumption.

Anderson gives energy policy top priority, since he believes that "our foreign policy, our economic policy, our prosperity all hinge on finding a solution to the energy situation." One of his more interesting ideas — not yet fully developed — is for a "counter-cartel" of oil-consuming nations to deal with OPEC on a one-to-one basis, as single purchaser for all, and as an allocating authority in case of shortages. Such a cartel, he suggested recently, might also "give non-OPEC oil preferred access to our markets."

Wishful thinking? John Who? Says who?

China begins to export manpower once again

Workers for foreign projects may be drawn from ranks of China's unemployed like these paupers demonstrating for assistance in Peking this fall.

By LINDA MATHEWS
The Los Angeles Times

PEKING — To earn the foreign currency vital to its modernization drive, China is preparing to package and export its most abundant natural resource: manpower.

A century after hundreds of thousands of Chinese coolies helped lay North America's transcontinental railroads, China has signed contracts with French and Italian companies to supply Chinese laborers for construction projects abroad.

Several Japanese firms have also been offered Chinese workers, in numbers ranging from a few hundred to tens of thousands, but have balked at the high wages demanded by the Peking authorites.

The oil-rich countries of the Middle East, which already import foreign workers for vast construction programs, are thought to be the primary target for Chinese labor. The agency in charge of Chinese manpower exports, the China Construction Engineering Co., expects Chinese workers to supplant some of the South Koreans, Pakistanis and Indians now toiling throughout the Arab World.

Tough U.S. immigration laws would be a barrier to massive imports of Chinese laborers, though American companies, including Pullman-Kellogg Inc. of Houston, have been approached about hiring Chinese for their projects in other countries.

The Chinese admit that when it comes to placing their skilled labor abroad, other Asians have a head start.

"To tell you the truth, China should have moved into this field 10 years ago," said Yang Yinghua, assistant manager of the China Construction Engineering Co. "But we couldn't even talk about sending workers overseas because of opposition from the Gang of Four. Now we have to catch up."

He referred to an ultra-radical group that virtually dominated the government in the middle '70s. After falling from favor, the four were arrested and are to be put on trial.

Many of China's migrant workers are likely to be drawn from southern Guangdong (Kwangtung) province, the ancestral home of most Chinese-Americans. Guangdong, which supplied many of the 19th-Century laborers to the United States, has organized a provincial-level company to export labor, in competition with the central government.

Sales pitch aimed at vast Arab construction projects

The vaguely worded, preliminary agreements signed so far make no reference to the Chinese railroad workers and gold miners sent to the United States in the 19th century. But the Communist authorities clearly want to avoid a repetition of that exodus, often condemned here as an example of the West's ruthless exploitation of cheap Chinese labor. The Chinese government now insists on proper working conditions for its laborers overseas, including Chinese food, and the observance of Chinese holidays. To ensure that the workers return home — many of the coolies of the last century stayed abroad — China has decreed two-year tours of duty.

Exporting labor is such a sensitive topic here, recalling a humiliating era in Chinese history, that the authorities have said practically nothing about their negotiations. Still, word has gotten around, through the grapevine or what the Chinese call "roadside news," and the subject of labor exports has even been thrashed out on Peking's Democracy Wall. The wallposter writers were generally in favor, before Democracy Wall was ordered abolished last week.

It is not clear how many Chinese will eventually be posted overseas. The China Construction Engineering Co. employs 80,000 laborers, many of whom have had experience abroad as part of China's foreign aid to the Third World. The company can conscript other laborers, howver, and a left-wing Hong Kong magazine with close ties to Peking, Cheng Ming, reported recently that up to 1 million Chinese could ultimately be committed to the project.

The first work teams will probably depart next year, under contracts signed by the French Association of Building Contractors and Italy's IRI Group. Both agreements call for the use of Chinese labor in oveseas projects, mostly in third countries, to lower the costs to the Italian and French firms. The size of the work crews has not been determined.

China's plans, which appear to be modelled on South Korea's highly successful labor export program, offer enormous advantages for China and its workers.

Besides opening up another source of foreign exchange, always scarce here, the scheme would ease China's growing unemployment problem. Exact figures on unemployment are unavailable, but Gu Ming, vice minister of the State Planning Commission, told a Japanese delegation last month that at least 10 million Chinese — one-tenth of the urban work force — are out of work.

Once the overseas workers return home, China also stands to gain from their experience and their expoosure to advanced technology and modern machinery.

"I suspect the Chinese view this as a gigantic on-the-job training program of the sort money can't buy," a European engineer said.

For individual workers, the rewards are dazzling by Chinese standards. A Hong Kong firm, Chronicle Consultants, is a subsidiary.

Lam said that many migrant workers will be drawn from the countryside and that on their return will be assured jobs in the cities. That is a major incentive, for most Chinese peasants yearn for the regular hours, guaranteed pay and old age pension that go with a city job.

Yang, the spokesman for the China Construction Engineering Co., said the work teams would be a mixture of skilled, semi-skilled and apprentice workers who would not be paid directly for their services. Instead, China would set a flat fee for the prospective employer — to be paid in advance — and would then be responsible for paying the workers.

The wges collected from the overseas employers would range from $300 to $900 a month per worker. The workers would get about 20 per cent of that, leaving the rest as much-needed foreign currency for China's modernization program.

The Guangdong Manpower Service Corp., one of several provincial-level agencies organized to promote labor exports, is offering teams of about 300 workers, each accompanied by two cooks, a barber and an interpreter. The corporation has assured prospective employers, in a circular, that the Chinese would be "diligent and obedient to the employer's reasonable instructions ... as well as abiding by the law in the place of work."

Lam, whose company was retained by the Guangdong agency, said workers from Guangdong and other parts of southern China would be especially suitable for assignments in Africa and the Arab World because of similarities in climate.

"Our main target areas are Iran, Kuwait, Libya and the United Arab Emirates," Lam said.

Among prospective employers, especially the Japanese, the initial response has been that the wage levels China has set are too high for an untried work force.

The Chinese, though taciturn about their wage scales, insist thay are lower than the South Koreans', whose methods have been studied closely here.

"Of course this is all in the spirit of friendly competition," Yang said with a grin. Also, foreign businessmen in Peking have seen enough of lackadaisical Chinese factories to wonder whether the work ethic for which China was once renowned has survived communism. Not only do today's Chinese seem to lack the industriousness of their forbears, the railroad workers, but they are no match for Koreans and other Asians offering their services abroad.

The risks are coming too fast

WASHINGTON POST

A quarter of a million Canadians were evacuated from their homes last month because of a train derailment that released deadly chlorine and phosgene gases. The story made frontpage news for one day and was quickly forgotten — which illustrates the strange and often perplexing ways in which society responds to the myriad risks of industrialized living. One can only imagine how bleak the future of nuclear power would be if 250,000 people had to be evacuated from the vicinity of a nuclear reactor.

What accounts for the phenomenon that produces yawns over chemical accidents and instant headlines about even the hint of a nuclear danger? It is not just a reaction to the ghostly qualities of radioactivity, though that is a part of it. Radioactivity can kill you without your ever having seen, smelled, heard or felt it. But there are also many chemicals — carbon monoxide, for example — that are colorless, odorless, tasteless and deadly. Nor is the difference simply that nuclear energy is relatively new and unfamiliar. Commercial nuclear power has been around for two decades now, and that is substantially longer than, for instance, people have recognized the relationship between chemicals and cancer.

Society, in other words, reacts differently to risks that a mathematician would say were equally grave. Coal, for example, is almost certainly more dangerous than nuclear power if the combined risks of mining accidents, black lung, air pollution, acid rain and carbon-dioxide buildup are considered. But Jane Fonda, et al., have yet to hold an anti-coal rally. We live happily with one technology, the automobile, that causes 50,000 deaths a year — an astronomical figure.

People are naturally more willing to accept the risks of a voluntary activity — especially one from which they receive a direct and obvious benefit — than the risks of an involuntary one. But a larger part of the explanation lies in a general public confusion. Recently it has begun to seem as though just about everything is dangerous to your health — nuclear power, chemical wastes, pesticides (which DuPont now advertises as "crop protection chemicals"), occupational hazards, antibiotics in animal feed, air pollution and on and on. Just about everything seems to cause cancer — what you do, what you eat (or don't eat), where you live.

Are the risks of ordinary living really increasing, or are they merely being advertised better? The answers aren't clear. We are running out of empty space where wastes can be dumped and forgotten. We are also able to measure tiny amounts of chemicals and traces of pollution that would have been undetectable only a few years ago. We have a slightly better understanding of which substances are likely to be carcinogenic, and a much improved appreciation of how closely various parts of the environment interact. In short, we are much more aware of risks that have been around for some time. But it may also be true that, because of more people, more industrial activity and declining natural resources, new dangers are now being generated faster than ever before.

A central theme of the 1980s will be coping with the discrepancy between the technical capacity to generate, detect, and measure risks, and our much more rudimentary social abilities to control, accommodate, and manage them.

Typecast forever?

Katharine Whitehorn

LONDON — "Since I'm female," said Lee Remick bitterly in the film where she was playing Eisenhower's driver, "I was naturally born typing." One bit of machinery has been almost part of the female anatomy until lately; now some more bits of machinery are suddenly making the entire secretarial world sit up and worry.

If word-processors can do the shorthand-typing, what can the shorthand-typists do? This was the big question posed at a recent conference in London for secretaries and for those who manage them — trainers and personnel officers and such.

About half the answers were simply pathetic. More filing, they could do; make the boss's travel arrangements themselves instead of leaving it to the travel department; do whatever they did more carefully — i.e. more slowly. A few ideas ranged wider: they could help train junior staff, work out office systems, get involved more with the boss' work. Maybe they could even (heavens!) prepare to switch into management themselves — though no-one seemed to think that most of them would want to bother.

But the big question remained unanswered: why is it that every little man in any office feels entitled to his own personal woman? For if she isn't typing his letters (her ostensible reason for being around) then what is she doing? I suspect the true answer would please neither bosses nor secretaries: she's making him feel good. She's making him feel there's someone he's superior to, someone who's on his side; someone with whom he can let his hair down — or even admit how he feels about losing it.

I once heard a man who runs refresher courses for Unilever say it was priceless to watch the executives coming in from all over Europe: "Without their secretaries, without their little support systems, they're lost, like new boys on their first day at school."

The cosy boss-secretary relationship has stayed unchanged for 50 years, not because anyone has ever really needed that much typing; but because it so clearly models the state of old-fashioned marriage. Dominant he, subservient she; money and security for her, an ego-boost for him. And the less things get like that at home the more a man welcomes it in the office. At least no-one there is going to ask him to cut the blasted grass.

Which is fine for him. And I'm not saying all secretaries are miserable or misplaced; if the word covers the girl who is but one up from the rubber plant, it also covers the woman who runs the firm and the woman who runs the man who runs the firm. Still, there are plenty of girls who get into the secretary business because their mothers say it will always give them something to fall back on (catch them saying that to their sons). And what they are trapped by is this essentially domestic pattern. In the 19th century, when all secretaries were men anyway, it was a recognized stepping stone for a bright young man going into banking or politics — but there was no nonsense about his settling down as an office wife. It's small wonder that when you hear of an ex-secretary who is now running her own business, it often turns out she worked for a whole outfit and not for just one man.

The Institute of Qualified Private Secretaries thinks that to judge a woman by her boss' rank is no better than "I am His Highness' dog at Kew; Pray tell me, Sir, whose dog are you?" They think that a girl helping a man struggle up the rock face may do a far tougher job than the one who simply sponges him down once he's reached the top. And they think women ought to be trained and ready to move into management.

But to do that means some sort of sensible job evaluation of what they already do. And management, half the time, won't hear of it. One woman had a horror story of a firm that was told to cross out the bit marked 'furniture' when evaluating secretarial work; in another, the forms were sent back covered with derisive scrawls. No way are the bosses going to give the litte lady a leg-up. Not that there isn't plenty of "And this is Mary — who keeps us all in order."

It all seems a great waste; only what would happen to management if you took away their security blanket? Do we really want an even more neurotic bunch of chaps scrambling up the power ladder, without anyone to calm them down and make them feel peaceful before they start on the long crawl home? I can't help feeling that, if we did do anything halfway sensible about secretaries, it would mean the end of civilization as we know it.

Jetfoil: nice ride but no answers

By AL FORREST

Provincial Transport Minister Alex Fraser and investor Sam Bawlf were whizzed across Juan de Fuca strait in a Boeing jetfoil Tuesday afternoon but the voyage ended with them no closer to an agreement.

Fraser said the jetfoil is "an exciting new mode of transportation" but it was up to private enterprise to get something going, such as a route between Victoria and Seattle.

Bawlf, in a separate interview, said that's all very well but private enterprise can't afford to operate the run without government help.

"The Marguerite was operating on a 50 per cent subsidy," he said. "How could private enterprise compete with that?"

Investors must know the ground rules, especially in what ways the government will be competing with subsidized service. Investors will also want to know in what ways the government might provide help.

In the middle is Robin Little, Boeing's marketing manager for North America, who can't get action out of either side.

"We keep coming up here but they seem to be no closer to a decision. It's frustrating."

The event was a demonstration ride for local officials and members of the press, organized by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce.

A dozen Norwegian businessmen had made the trip up from Seattle aboard the Flying Princess in two hours, less than half the time of the Marguerite, and the jetfoil was available for a test run in the afternoon.

The double-decker craft, which seats 250, was a bit bumpy leaving the Inner Harbor, while riding hullborne in the water. The effect was like riding a horse.

But once out in the strait, with foils extended down, lifting the hull out of the water, the vessel took off at 43 knots, the equivalent of the highway speed of 80 kilometres per hour. The hull rode above most of the waves, creating only an occasional bump.

Many of the guests crowded into the front of the lower deck to get the sensation of speed over rough waters.

Incoming chamber president Cedric Steele called it "an exciting way to travel."

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber also rated it "highly enjoyable."

Meanwhile, Bawlf persisted with the economics of jetfoils.

B.C. Ferries faces expenditures of $1 billion in the 1980s, for subsidies, new terminals and vessels, he said.

A single $10 million jetfoil could do the work of a $40 million ferry in terms of transportating people, but not cars.

It makes sense to encourage low-cost spending on jetfoils to deal with increasing loads, he said.

For example, a downtown-to-downtown jetfoil trip between Vancouver and Nanaimo would take only an hour, compared with the downtown-to-downtown time for B.C. Ferries of about three hours.

But the jetfoil can't compete on price under the present subsidy system.

Bawlf said the next move is up to the provincial government.

Extension hits 50 properties

A Saanich alderman's claim that 30 homes will be demolished and another 20 properties affected in some way by the proposed McKenzie Avenue extension is correct, a highways ministry spokesman confirmed today.

Senior information officer Ray Baines said the planned four-laning of McKenzie to link the Trans-Canada and Pat Bay highways will affect about 50 properties along the edge of the right-of-way.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier decided Tuesday to call a special meeting and have a second look at the planned extension. Earlier this year council approved preliminary drawings for the arterial route.

Ald. Bob Cameron asked for the special meeting after telling the public works committee Tuesday that 30 homes will be sacrificed for the extension.

Municipal engineer Cliff Warren said at the meeting he believes only about 20 homes will be torn down to make way for the highway.

Baines said the number is closer to 30 and that another 20 properties will have "corners nicked off."

Ald. Irene Block said no mention was made of the number of properties affected during a closed meeting with ministry officials in July.

Cameron said he has other evidence that might persuade council members the extension isn't necessary.

Flues low on risk list

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Faults in electrical wiring and appliances continue to be the major causes of fires in Canada, according to the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

Careless smoking is a close second while defective and overheated chimneys and flues, so much in the news these days, rank among the least of all causes.

The seventh edition of Facts of the General Insurance Industry, published by the IBC, reveals faulty wiring and appliances caused 15,532 of the 74,043 fires across Canada in 1977 for a loss of $114.4 million.

There were 12,680 fires caused by careless smoking and only 482 from defective and overheated chimneys and flues. The losses were $53 million and $2.5 million respectively.

The Facts book also notes the number of fires attributed to arson is climbing as is the number of fires of undetermined origin.

In 1977 there were 8,957 arsons resulting in a loss of just under $100 million, and 14,688 fires where the cause could not be determined and which lead to losses of $151 million.

The total fire loss for the year was $571.6 million.

The IBC statistical summary shows the insurance industry in Canada wrote nearly $6 billion worth of premiums in 1978, a more than 400 per cent increase over the past 10 years.

Automobile premiums totalled $2.8 billion, property insurance premiums, $2.3 billion and liability premiums, $443.9 million.

It was the first time in many years the automobile sector was less than 50 per cent of total general insurance premiums. In 1977 auto premiums accounted for 53 per cent of all premiums; in 1978, 47 per cent.

A major reason for the drop in auto insurance premiums — they hit $3 billion in 1977 — was the introduction of a government compensation system in Quebec covering personal injuries, the IBC says.

The Facts book points out a marked growth in property insurance. Ten years ago total premiums were only $397 million.

Profits, too, have increased with the industry chalking up its best year ever in 1978 — showing a combined investment and underwriting income of $561 million.

That was an increase of $106 million over the previous year and $150 million over 1976.

The most significant development has been in underwriting income. In the early part of the decade the industry suffered small losses in this sector. By 1974 the losses totalled $266 million.

By 1977 the picture had changed completely with the industry recording a profit of $47 million.

NORAD tests slated

The North American Air Defence Command (NORAD) was to begin early-morning exercises today to test aerospace warning and defence systems along the west coasts of Canada and the U.S.

The exercise continues early Thursday and, if weather causes a delay today, from 4 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Friday.

NORAD fighter interceptors will scramble to intercept enemy planes attempting to penetrate the radar defence screen. About 200 aircraft from the Canadian Forces Air Defence Group, U.S. Aerospace Defence Command, Strategic Air Command, Tactical Air Command, Air National Guard, Pacific Command and Marine Corps will take part.

Canadian forces personnel from 409 All Weather Fighter Squadron of CFB Comox, Canadian Forces Station Baldy Hughes near Prince George, CFS Kamloops and CFS Holberg on Vancouver Island are involved in the exercise.

Uranium delay feared

VANCOUVER (CP)— A $300-million agreement to supply British Columbia uranium to Korea could be jeapardized if government approval does not come by Dec. 31, 1981, the royal commission on uranium mining in B.C. was told Tuesday.

Norcen Energy Resources Ltd. submitted a copy of its provisional agreement to commissioners.

References to the pricing formula were deleted from the public submission, but Norcen officials said the formula would be provided to the commissioners on a confidential basis.

The contract calls for Norcen to deliver 4,329,000 pounds of uranium to the Korea Electric Co. during a 10-year period beginning in 1983.

The uranium will come from Norcen's Blizzard property about 50 kilometres southeast of Kelowna. The contract states that there are 10,384,000 pounds of uranium reserves on the property.

Four-day closure in rail landslide

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — It will take up to four days to repair track damaged in a landslide five kilometres south of here, Canadian National Railway officials said Tuesday.

The landslide Monday night derailed eight CNR freight cars and wiped out rail transportation to the city. There were no injuries.

The derailed cars were part of a trainload of woodchips bound for the Canadian Cellulose pulp mill at Watson Island east of the city. It was not immediately know what caused the slide.

Railway spokesman at the regional office in Edmonton said further assessment of the damage is needed before estimates can be made, adding that rerouting of freight is not anticipated.

If the tracks are reopened quickly, it is likely the port's grain elevator will not be affected.

—Charlie Paul, manager of the federally-owned elevator, said Tuesday that while the 89 carloards of wheat already in the port will only take a day to unload, crews could be kept busy for up to a week on necessary maintenance.

Jack Kreut, manager for CanCel's northern pulp operation, said that although the company is concerned about the loss of the chip cars, the slide is expected to have little impact on the mill's operation.

Damage to the track occurred west of the plant, leaving the way clear for the transport of woodchips from suppliers in Terrace, 130 kilometres east of here.

Ray Nesbitt, National Harbors board port administrator, said that lumber shipments of 10 to 12 carloads daily from Prince George mills will be curtailed by the rail line closure.

Saw victim punched: witness

EDMONTON (CP) — Roy Sangil told a Court of Queen's Bench jury Tuesday that he called police when he noticed one of two Victoria men charged in the death of David Joseph Poggi punching the victim outside the Corona Hotel.

Graves and Andrew John Carter, both 19, of Victoria, are charged with second-degree murder in the Aug. 22, 1978, death of Poggi, 22, of Millbrae, Calif.

Sangil, then assistant manager at the hotel, told the jury that Graves was a guest at the hotel. He said the victim had been chased to the front door of the hotel by Graves and a second man he identified only as "Jim."

The witness testified that the victim's head was held by "Jim" and punched by Graves.

False tax receipts bring $1,250 fine

VANCOUVER (CP) — Major Singh Gill was fined $1,250 in provincial court Tuesday for selling false income tax receipts to persons claiming dependents in India.

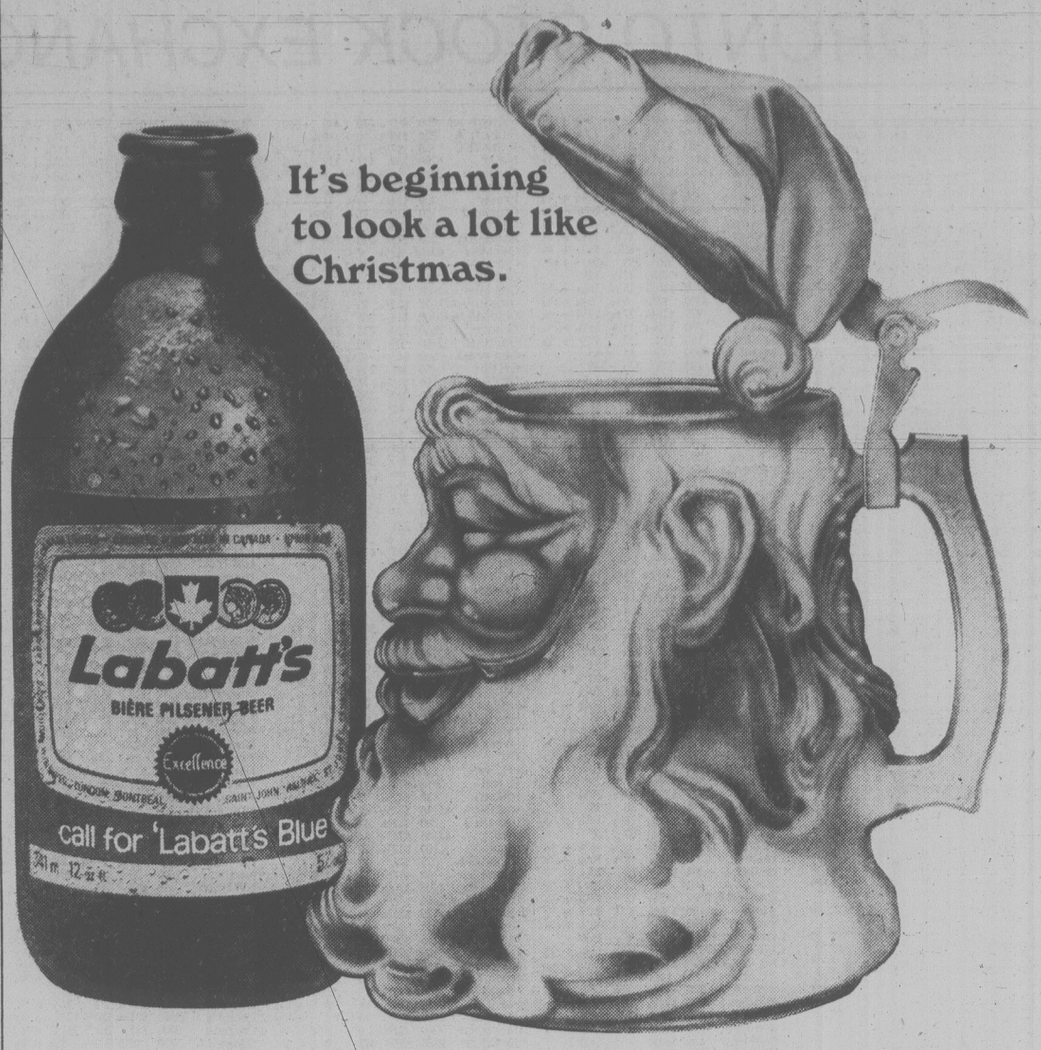

Gill had pleaded guilty to four charges under of the Income Tax Act of participating in the making of a false statement by another.

Court was told that while in the currency exchange business in 1974 and 1975, Gill sold a large quantity of false receipts to persons who were not sending money to dependents in India.

The four counts on which he was convicted included nine receipts totalling $4,592.

Defence lawyer Don Martin said that prior to committing the offences, two of Gill's associates had not forwarded money to India which he had collected.

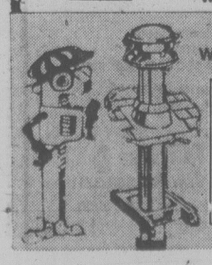

When Gill approached the associates, they threatened him and his family and told him to sell the receipts to pay back persons who were demanding return of their money, he said.

Introducing
The Natural
carob candy bar

Move over chocolate.
Here comes carob!
It looks like chocolate.
It tastes like chocolate.
But there the resemblance ends.
The nutritious fruit pods of the Mediterranean carob tree have been a source of food since biblical times. Legend tells how John the Baptist ate them during his vigil in the wilderness. In fact, carob is known as St. John's bread.
Perhaps we should have called it St. John's candy bar. But we decided to call it The Natural because of the nutritious natural goodness of the carob.
The first time you let some melt in your mouth, you'll find it has a tantalizing flavour you'll love.
A natural sweetness without a trace of bitterness. And a creamy smooth texture that makes you feel like you're indulging in something sinful.
All the natural goodness of carob has been blended with great taste favourites like peanut butter, almonds and coconut.
The natural choice for anyone who wants to give the taste buds a treat . . . without having to feel guilty about it.
The natural choice for anyone who wants a delicious, nutritious alternative to chocolate.
Bye bye chocolate. Carob is here, and it's a natural.
Available at your favorite candy counter in two nutty new flavours—The Natural Carob/Peanut Butter and The Natural Carob/Almond.

Bonds

Tuesday

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were sharply lower in active trading on the Canadian bond market Tuesday.

The short end of the market fell one-quarter of a point. Mid-, long-term and provincial issues dropped three-quaters of a point. Corporate issues lost one-half.

Day-to-day money was available at 15 per cent.

Participants were, on the whole, in a holding pattern in anticipation of the federal budget.

WALNUT YOGURT RING

1 cup walnuts, divided
⅔ cup butter
1 cup sugar, divided
2 eggs
1 (200 ml) container plain yogurt
1 teaspoon grated lemon peel
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups sifted all-purpose flour
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon

Chop walnuts coarsely. Cream butter with ¾ cup sugar, until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs, one at a time, until well blended. Stir in yogurt, lemon peel and vanilla.

Resift flour with baking powder, soda and salt. Add to creamed mixture stirring until smooth. Add ¾ cup walnuts. Turn half batter into greased and floured 9 inch pan.

Mix remaining ¼ cup sugar with cinnamon; sprinkle over [illegible] batter; sprinkle with remaining ¼ cup walnuts.

Bake below oven centre in moderate oven, 350 degrees F., about 1 hour, until cake tests done. Cool 10 minutes; remove from pan. Drizzle with sugar glaze made by combining glaze ingredients.

POWDERED SUGAR GLAZE

Harry and Timmy and the Christmas List that Never Was

By Erin Sawatsky

Harry the hound had no home. Now we all know it wouldn't be much fun not to have a home. Imagine. No place to set up your electric train set. No mother to make sure your ears are clean. No secret place to tuck yourself away into when you're feeling sad. No warm bed to crawl into when you're so, so sleepy. Nobody to really love you.

Well, Harry didn't have an electric train. And he probably wouldn't have liked anybody's mother looking in HIS ears. He had plenty of secret places to hide his bones and some special places to crawl into when he was tired. What Harry wanted was what every home has. A family. A boy or girl to love him. To scratch him behind his ears. And tell him he was a good dog.

It just so happened that at the same time Harry, the hound was wishing for a home, Timmy, the little boy, was wishing for a dog. Christmas was coming. Timmy knew that. All his friends were talking about Christmas. All the stores were filled with decorations. All the houses had lights shining red and green and blue and gold around their doors and windows.

This Christmas, Timmy had made up his mind what he wanted. On Saturday, his Dad had promised to take him to see Santa in the big white castle in the middle of the shopping mall.

"Make a list, Tim, of all the things you want Santa to bring you," his Dad said.

"I can't write, yet, Dad," Timmy said.

"Draw pictures then," his Dad said.

Timmy went and got a pencil and some paper. He went to the secret place under the stairs he always went to, when he needed to really think about something. He sat down. He put his hand under his chin. He lay down on his stomach and stuck his finger down a hole in the floor. He took out his pencil and tried to draw a picture of a dog. He made a big circle on the paper and put big droopy ears on it. Then eyes. And a big tongue. Hanging out. He folded his paper and put it in his pocket and went to play with his electric train.

Sure enough . . . Saturday came and Timmy and his Dad set out to see Santa. Timmy was so excited. He stood in a long line with lots of other children. He had to stand a long time but he didn't care. Finally, it was his turn. He climbed up on Santa's knee and looked into the friendliest face he'd ever seen. With sort of wrinkly-up eyes. All twinkly and blinkly and laughing-like.

Santa asked him what he wanted for Christmas. Suddenly, Timmy remembered his piece of paper. He remembered the circle and the droopy ears. He stuck his hand in his pocket. Deep down. Gone. It was gone. A funny sort of feeling started way down inside him. It was the sort of feeling he got when he knew he was going to cry.

"I lost my list," Timmy said.

"Your list?" Santa said.

"It was on my list. My Dad said to draw it on my list. What I wanted. He said I needed to give it to you," Timmy said, trying not to cry. But suddenly he thought he really might start to cry and he couldn't ever, ever let Santa see him cry. So, he slid off Santa's lap fast and ran off to find his Dad.

On the way home, Timmy just sat in the corner of the car. He didn't say anything at all. All of a sudden, his Dad stepped down very hard on the brakes and Tim heard a funny sound.

"Oh no," his Dad said, ". . . dog ran right out of the ditch, I couldn't stop."

Timmy and his Dad got out and found the mangiest, droopiest eared dog you've ever seen lying by the car. His eyes were big and sad looking. He lifted his head and tried to lick Timmy's hand.

"Is he hurt, Dad, is he hurt?" Timmy cried.

"Just his leg, I think, Tim. Let's see if we can get him into the car."

I bet you can guess who the dog was. Harry the hound. Riding off with Timmy, the little boy, to see the dog doctor. Harry had a sore leg but he sure looked happy. He lay with his big head on Timmy's lap. Timmy looked into Harry's big brown eyes and Harry looked into Timmy's blue eyes. And anyone looking could tell right off that Harry loved Timmy and Timmy loved Harry.

This all happened five years ago. Now Harry has just a little scar on his leg. He still has his droopy ears. He still has his sad-looking eyes. But now, Harry has the happiest home any dog could ever wish for.

As for Timmy. He knows how to write out a Christmas list now, of course. But you know, he never ever does. I guess it's because Timmy knows something very special. Sometimes, the best gifts of all are the ones you never even asked for.

A Frugal Christmas

By Lois Smith

Tis the season when kids confide in Santa their hopes of getting the doll that does everything but pay for itself, or the fancy electronic game that strains their brain, and your budget. Tis the season you start to wonder "do they really want it? Do they really need it? Can we really afford it?"

If this is the year you decide to cut down, it's nice to know that you can still find many gifts for children for $10 and under.

A good place to start is with the sale flyers now coming into your home with your newspaper. You'll be surprised what $10 can buy.

Very young children are mostly interested in toys, and in department store toy departments this year, you'll find a good selection of smaller cuddly, plushy animals to amuse your youngsters. There are still some pretty dolls that don't "do" anything but provide your children with an outlet for their imagination. If there's a handyman on the premises . . . think about building a basic doll house. Then look for accessories, and wrap lots of them separately in fabric scraps that can be used to "create" curtains, etc. And for hours and hours of enjoyment, don't overlook simple colouring books and crayons, available almost everywhere.

For eight years and up, games are always a good bet, and there are more and more on the market every year, most of them still priced under $10. Speaking of games, if your children don't already play chess, it's a good time to start. You'd be surprised how youngsters take to chess once they've got a small plastic set, and a simple book of rules. A dainty heart or flower pendant is always popular with girls, and for both boys and girls, a transistor radio of their own is a winner. They're under $10 at Radio Shack stores. It's about this age when you can introduce your children to the joys of making things for themselves. Model aircraft and ship kits, electronics kits, and kits to create hooked rugs and wall hangings can be had for less than $10 at hobby stores and department stores.

If you want something a little different, consider giving your 10 to 13-year-olds a 1980 appointments book. They'll feel very important, recording hockey practise, movie dates and birthday parties, and what's more they'll be learning the value of scheduling themselves while considering it fun. You can get appointment books by the day, week or month at stationery and department stores. This is the age group that likes posters of their favourite rock stars, Star Wars T-shirts, huge jigsaw puzzles and anything that smacks of "grown up", like real wallets for the boys, perfumed soap and bubble bath for the girls.

And a final thought . . . books. There are books for every child's particular age and interests, from simple A.B.C. books for the very young, through the wonders of Oz; from the thrilling world of the Hardy Boys to the Brothers Grimm to children's editions of poetry and Greek mythology. A book. It's not big. It's not expensive. But although Christmasses will come and go, a well-chosen book given now can introduce your children to reading pleasure that will stay with them for the rest of their lives. And that's not a bad gift.

This Christmas-Time

By Leith Fyfe

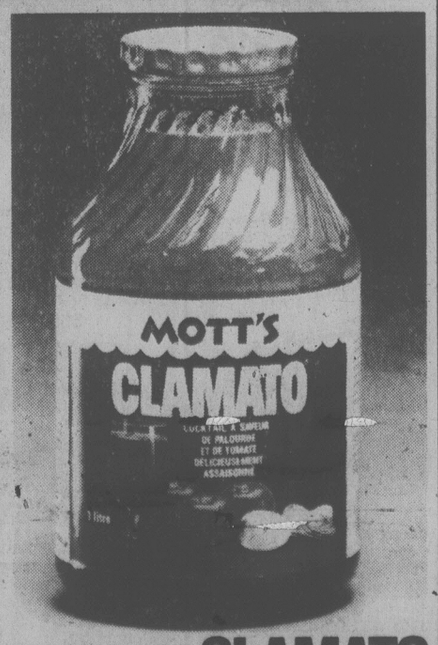

You've heard the tales of Christmas past, and how it all began,
So far away — a special day in tiny Bethlehem.
You've seen Santa in the stores, perhaps sat on his knee,
You've known the fun of wrapping gifts, and fixing up the tree.
You've hunted up that stocking dear, and hung it out with care,
And gone to bed with hopes and dreams of what will soon be there.
You've known the joy of waking up upon a Christmas day
With everything just as you wished — all good and bright and gay.
But maybe you've been wondering just what it's all about —
This Christmas-time that comes around each year without a doubt?
It's really just a feeling that spreads all around the world,
Of love, and peace, and happiness, for every boy and girl.

Murder probe didn't include blood testing

A B.C. Supreme Court jury was told Tuesday that a blood sample taken from a dead man is found in only one per cent of the population but Esquimalt police did not have bloodstained materials examined to see if it contained that type of blood.

The evidence came in the first day of the trial of George Ronald Wyatt, 42, accused of second-degree murder of Charles Devine, 46, on March 19.

Constable Bruce McLean, who with Constable Richard McVie were the first to go to an Esquimalt Road apartment where Devine was found dead on the living room floor, said it was entirely possible that blood from one part of Devine's body could have come from another person.

McLean also said no fingerprint work was done anywhere in the apartment. Specifically asked about fingerprinting of fragments of china with apparent bloodstains on them, he said one reason this wasn't done was that three people had justification for having prints on them — Wyatt, Margaret Thompson and Douglas Wootton.

He said Wyatt's pants were sent to the RCMP crime laboratory in Vancouver and no blood was found on them but Wootton's pants weren't sent.

McLean said the first time Wyatt was implicated was on March 20 at the detoxification unit when Wootton made a statement to Constable John Macdonald. McLean denied that Wyatt was to be blamed before Wootton said anything.

He told defence counsel David Wilson it was possible that Wootton was told by police that police believed Wyatt was responsible for the beating death of Devine.

Asked if Wootton was told it was best to co-operate, McLean replied "I can't recall those exact words. You better ask Constable Macdonald."

Pressed further that Wootton was told he better co-operate, McLean replied "yes, I would say that is correct."

McLean said he didn't see any blood on Wootton or his shoes or on Mrs. Thompson when he arrived at the apartment.

He found Devine face-down on the living room carpet. The man had a 16-inch scratch along his spine, a large bruise on the left side of the back, swelling behind the right ear, congealed blood in the nose and mouth and numerous fragments of china and glass embedded in the carpet under him. The man had an abrasion to the left cheek, chin, nose and upper lip.

Wyatt's condition appeared normal and did not appear intoxicated. It appeared that Wyatt, Wootton and Mrs. Thompson had just got up.

Constable McVie said Wyatt told him that Devine, an old friend, had passed out.

The group had supper the previous evening and Devine went out, returning later looking like he had been in a fight with blood and cuts to the face. About midnight he seemed to pass out.

An ambulance was called the following morning when Devine was checked and appeared to be dead.

McVie talked to Wootton who agreed with Wyatt's story adding that he checked him at 3 a.m. and he appeared alive.

Mrs. Thompson told him she had gone to bed early and knew nothing until she got up at 7 a.m. and saw Devine on the floor.

McVie also said Wyatt told him Devine had been drinking all day and was pretty drunk and could hardly be understood when he returned in the late evening.

He said Mrs. Thompson had said she went to bed at 8 or 8.30 p.m. with Wyatt and this was in conflict with Wyatt's statement that he went to bed about midnight.

Pathologist Dr. Nasser Shojania said he conducted an autopsy on Devine March 19 and said there were four distinct bruises to the head and just over 20 per cent of the brain contained blood clot.

A dislocated collar bone was caused by mechanical force, as in someone kicking him while he was on the ground.

The most important cause of death, he said, was the head injury. He thought Devine died of multiple head injuries.

The wounds were compatible with kicks, he said.

Shojania was to continue his evidence today. The trial is being presided over by Mr. Justice George Murray.

Schools tax hike on way?

A 6.26-mill rise in school taxes is predicted for Saanich Peninsula School District next year because of provincial government education policy.

"We are distressed the province has shifted more responsibility on the district taxpayer," said board chairman Lois Walsh in commenting on estimates presented to trustees Monday night by district secretary-treasurer Ross Ingram.

Last week Education Minister Brian Smith set the 1980 basic education rate 2.5 mills higher than the current rate, meaning $215,000 less in provincial education funding for Saanich School District.

The ratio of cost sharing between the province and district taxpayers will shift from about 52:48 in favor of the province this year to more than 60:40 in the province's favor in the upcoming budget.

Ingram noted the district had 67 more pupils this year, which should have raised the number of instructional units by four. Instructional units are the basis on which grants are paid to the district, and with four more units the grant would have been worth the equivalent of one mill in taxation, Ingram said.

The province did not allow the instructional units because of the way the additional students were distributed among the schools.

Grade 5 enrolment closed off

Saanich school trustees said Monday they have have closed enrolment in the Grade 5 class at Greenglade Elementary School and served notice further closures are coming.

The limits were set on class enrolment because schools are not elastic, said Trustee Gerry Kristianson in a message aimed at the public, housing developers and municipal officials.

Greenglade is the newest school in the district and enrolment has risen quickly since September.

Trustees decided they will not squeeze pupils in because of burgeoning population increases.

The board's policy is to instead tailor enrolment to the school, in this case limiting primary classes to 24 pupils and elementary classes to 30.

In the case of Grade 5, the limit has been reached.

Chairman Lois Walsh said a notice to this effect will be posted, along with warnings that other classes will be closed to new pupils when their maximum enrolment is reached.

Exposure cause of deaths

Exposure combined with hypothermia apparently caused the death of Roy Mostad, 44, and an unidentified male juvenile found Sunday aboard the gillnetter Salinta, says the acting coroner in Ketchikan, Alaska.

Hypothermia is a below-normal body temperature.

Judge Henry Keene said samples taken at an autopsy Monday will be sent to a laboratory for confirmation.

The two bodies and that of another unidentified female juvenile were found aboard Mostad's badly damaged 10-metre boat which was washed ashore at Tree Point, a rugged part of the Alaskan coast about 75 kilometres northwest of Prince Rupert.

A fourth body was found Monday near the boat and an intensive air-sea search is continuing for the six other people who were aboard when the boat went missing on a trip to an Indian reserve at Kincolith on Portland Inlet last week.

Imvolved in the search today were a Voyageur helicopter from CFB Comox, a United States Coast Guard helicopter from Ketchikan and a U.S. Coast Cuard cutter from Sitka.

However, Alaska state troopers say it is unlikely any other bodies will surface from the cold water off the Alaskan coast.

Keene said he is uncertain of the exact time of death of the two bodies on which autopsies were performed. He said extremely cold water acts as a preservative and the victims could have been dead one day or one week.

RCMP officials have identified only Mostad, refusing to identify the juvenile male and female also found aboard the wrecked boat. No details were given on the fourth person. All the bodies were taken to Ketchikan.

The Salinta left Prince Rupert on Dec. 2 with Mostad, his three children — Tommy, 13, Robert, 9, and Tina, 9 — Judy Stevens, 30, and her children — Lyle, 7, Nadine, 6, and Roselle, 4, — and Wendy Stevens, 27, and her four-year-old daughter Angie on board. All are from Prince Rupert.

The boat was not reported missing until Friday, five days after it left Prince Rupert for the 7½-hour trip to Kincolith.

Bulkley hearing urged

VANCOUVER (CP) — The effects of Aluminum Co. of Canada Ltd.'s proposed full-scale expansion of its Kemano Power Plant could have disastrous downstream effects on fish and wildlife, a spokesman for the Save the Bulkley Association said Tuesday.

The Bulkley River, with its tributaries, the Morice and Nanika rivers, and the Nechako River which is part of the Fraser River system, are among the main concerns of environmentalists who say the project would drastically reduce the rivers' flow and damage fish and wildlife.

The company said the power generated by the expansion in northwestern B.C. would supply three new aluminum smelters.

"We are going to ask the provincial government to undertake a legal review of the water rights granted to Alcan in 1950 by the B.C. government for the expansion of Kemano," David Gillespie of Smithers, a Save the Bulkley Association spokesman, said in a telephone interview.

Under the agreement, Alcan is allowed to develop the watershed of the Nechako River above the Kenney Dam and to divert the water from Nanika and Kidprice lakes and drainage system into the Nechako reservoir.

"We are going to press for a series of public hearings," Gillespie said.

UVic economist could live with lower Canadian dollar

The federal government's high-interest rate policies are doing far more harm than good, a University of Victoria economist said Tuesday night.

Dr. Robert Cherneff said high rates do not solve inflation, they make it worse. And they add to unemployment.

He was addressing a meeting of the Victoria branch of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada at the Red Lion Inn.

Cherneff said the Bank of Canada is achieving nothing with high interest rates except protecting the value of the Canadian dollar.

"I could live with a lower dollar, in the range of 80 or 82 cents, if they would reduce interest rates and thereby do something significant about inflation and unemployment."

He said Ottawa continues to follow outmoded economic doctrines, those designed to deal with the depression by the economist Keynes, whose name, he said, is correctly pronounced "canes."

Under this traditional thinking, Cherneff said, interest rates are raised to reduce inflation — and lowered to reduce unemployment.

This is based on the idea that people spend less when rates are high and more when rates are low.

The present reality, he said, is that both inflation and unemployment are growing and high interest rates are making both problems worse.

This is because the demand for goods exceeds the supply. The high bidding sends prices up and, at the same time, there is not enough production to provide an adequate number of jobs.

The way to tackle both problems at the same time is to bring in a low-interest policy and be prepared for the economic consequences of a low dollar.

Tourism and export manufacturing would grow even stronger, although trips abroad would become more expensive and the cost of imported items would rise.

On balance, he said, Canada would be far better off with this policy of low interest rates.

In addition, it would help Canadian consumers to buy homes and other things they need.

High interest has not dampened spending because consumers are afraid of inflation — they are worried that if they don't buy now they will have to pay even more next year.

This is particularly noticeable in high-cost items like homes and cars, he said.

Cherneff warned that a policy based on supply factors, like reducing interest rates, would take several years to work through the economy.

That's why politicians cling to other methods, even if they are outmoded, he said.

Politicians are not interested in a solution five years down the road when they may have to face the electorate in two or three years.

In other business at the meeting, the 100 members present voted unanimously to put on a home show at the Esquimalt Recreation Centre on April 24, 25, 26. About 140 booths of household items will be on display.

HUDAC also voted to hold a parade of homes next year. The 1979 parade of homes in Saanich drew 22,000 visitors in one week.

Money gusher curbed for oil drilling firms

OTTAWA (CP) — The government intends to remove the richest features of energy exploration tax incentives used by resource companies and high-income individuals, Finance Minister John Crosbie announced Tuesday in his budget.

Ottawa is cutting the most generous provisions of the tax benefits but they will still be attractive enough to keep the private sector searching for new oil, the government believes.

The leaner provisions:

—Reduction to 6⅔ per cent from 66⅔ per cent in the so-called "super depletion" allowance for frontier drilling, effective April through Dec. 31, 1980.

—An immediate cut to 10 per cent from 30 per cent in the deduction allowed against the purchase of Canadian oil and gas properties.

In addition, for the next five years, energy users — principally manufacturers — will be able to continue writing off the cost of energy conservation equipment over two years, faster than normal. As well, the write-off allowance now will include certain solar-heating equipment, small-scale hydro projects and other conservation equipment.

The measures are part of a wider energy package that includes a still-unresolved proposal by Ottawa to tax increased revenues of the petroleum industry.

Since its introduction in 1977, use of "super depletion" has encouraged drilling activity in the Beaufort Sea and off the East Coast, where the industry has been successful in discovering some new natural gas.

However, finance department officials say the allowance has proved to be an unnecessarily rich incentive for the resource exploration companies and investors participating in frontier drilling funds.

Exploration companies have received more in tax deductions than they actually spent on drilling activities.

Crosbie said in his budget speech high income individuals also received "tax benefits that are actually larger than the costs of their investments."

"This is not tolerable."

In the past, for every $1 invested, resource companies paid eight cents or less in after-tax costs. Now their after-tax costs will rise to 36 cents for every $1 invested.

Drilling funds investors face similar tax effects. The previous rules allowed taxpayers in the highest tax bracket to reduce taxes by $140 for every $100 invested, resulting in a profit for $40 to the investor. Now, however, the same individual will get back only $98 for every $100 invested, resulting in a net cost of $2.

"It will make him more prudent about what he invests in," an official said. "Before he didn't care. He will now try and get a meaningful share of drilling fund profits."

He noted that in many funds, the sponsoring company retains most of the profits.

Ottawa believes the changes will not curb exploration activity because the new "super depletion" combined with existing write-off provisions for frontier drilling is still more attractive than deductions allowed in Alberta.

In addition, the nergy tax incentives are more lucrative than fast write-offs allowed for purchasing machinery.

The finance department says the generous allowance provisions, introduced in 1977, was intended to last only three years as an experiment.

Officials maintain the allowance did what it was supposed to do — stimulate frontier exploration — but now the incentives do not have to be as sweet because rising energy prices, coupled with a less-generous allowance, will be a sufficient spur to the industry and investors.

The other reduced tax incentive is designed to make it easier for smaller Canadian exploration companies to compete in the bidding for resource properties, which have had a five-fold increase in value ofer the last six years, say officials.

While buyers still will be able to write off the entire cost of buying resource properties, they will be able to deduct only 10 per cent a year on the declining balance of the purchase price.

As a result, the write-off period will take more than 20 years, compared with slightly more than six years now.

Overshadowing the tax changes is the unsolved revenue tax scheme which the federal government has been trying to negotiate with Alberta.

Pending a settlement, Ottawa assumes the following tax-sharing arrangement:

—Jan. 1, on a previously-scheduled $1-a-barrel increase in the domestic price of crude, the existing tax-sharing scheme is maintained, giving 10 cents to Ottawa and 45 cents each to the producing provinces and the industry.

—July 1, on a proposed $2-a-barrel increase, the normal tax scheme prevails for the first dollar. But for the second, Ottawa plans to take 50 cents, with the remainder left to the producing provinces which will determine if the industry shares as well.

£Oct. 1, on a proposed $1-a-barrel increase, Ottawa and the provinces again split the rise 50-50.

—Jan. 1, 1981, on a proposed $2.25-a-barrel increasen Ottawa reverts to its original 10-cent share on the first $1, with the provinces and industry taking 95 cents each. But Ottawa and the provinces will split the next $1.25 at a rated of 62.5 cents each.

The recommended Jan. 1, 1981, share is then to become the pattern for the scheduled $2.25-a-barrel increases every six months.

Ottawa has promised that the increased revenues it receives will be directed to energydrelated projects.

One of these is a proposed Canadian Energy Bank, funded from revenues generated by the suggested energy tax.

Federal contributions will be $42 million in 1980-81, rising to $908 million in 1983-84.

Officials say the bank in which provinces have been invited to participate, will be used to fund projects which might not have sponsors or others which the two levels of government want to pursue.

Officials cite heavy oil upgrading plants and a gas distribution system to the Maritimes — each costing a possible $1 billion — as possible investment targets for the bank.

Tax rules eased for family units

By ROD CURRIE

OTTAWA (CP) — A number of family law tax reforms recognizing the trend in modern society toward common-law unions, illegitimate children, working spouses and marriage breakups are included in the budget.

A finance department spokesman said the government is simply catching up with various provincial reforms in the last two or three years.

All the new laws make it easier for persons living outside what was once considered the traditional family unit.

For instance, under the old law, a husband could claim deductions from his taxable income only on maintenance payments to a legal wife. But now such payments to a common-law spouse may be claimed if they are made under a court order.

In Ontario, for instance, the court may order a man to support financially a common law partner. The federal law is simply being updated to make such payments deductible, the spokesman said.

The new regulations also cover similar court-ordered payments to illegitimate children, effective immediately.

Effective this taxation year, the definition of child in the Income Tax Act will include a stepchild. Previously a step-child was not included under a provision whereby an individual could transfer property tax-free to his or her children.

Another change means that if the owner of a small unincorporated business wants to employ his or her spouse, the owner may — starting in 1980 — deduct as an expense any money paid the spouse.

The amount will be added to the taxable income of the spouse. Crosbie said in his budget speech Tuesday night the measure will cost an estimated $150 million a year.

In the past, only a business incorporated as a company could claim such deductions.

"What the federal government is saying now, is that it doesn't matter if it's a company or not, a reasonable salary is deductible," the spokesman said.

Another change modifies a clause originally devised to prevent married couples from shuffling property for dubious income-splitting gain, but which caused problems for couples legally separated.

To prevent a husband, say, from simply putting a money earning property in his wife's name for tax purposes, the law provided that any such income must still be attributed to the husband.

But in such a case, after a separation, a husband was caught paying income tax on profits collected by his former wife.

Under the new law, the stipulation does not apply to a legally separated couple from the time they separate.

Budget plugs tax holes

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal budget cracks down on individuals and companies which have made use of variety of loopholes to avoid paying income tax.

The plugged loopholes affect energy, small business and individual taxing arrangements and include:

— An end to tax imbalances created when energy resource owners sold their properties to tax-exempt institutions and received a 25-per-cent deduction against profits.

The usual tax policy — in which royalties are not allowed for deduction — did not apply since the buyers, such as charities and pension plans, do not pay tax anyway.

In future, tax-exempt institutions will have to pay a tax on 46 per cent of the disallowed provincial resource royalties on petroleum properties.

— Non-resident operators, principally American, will no longer be able tt sell their interests, leave Canada and pay only a 15-per-cent withholding tax on the royalty interest.

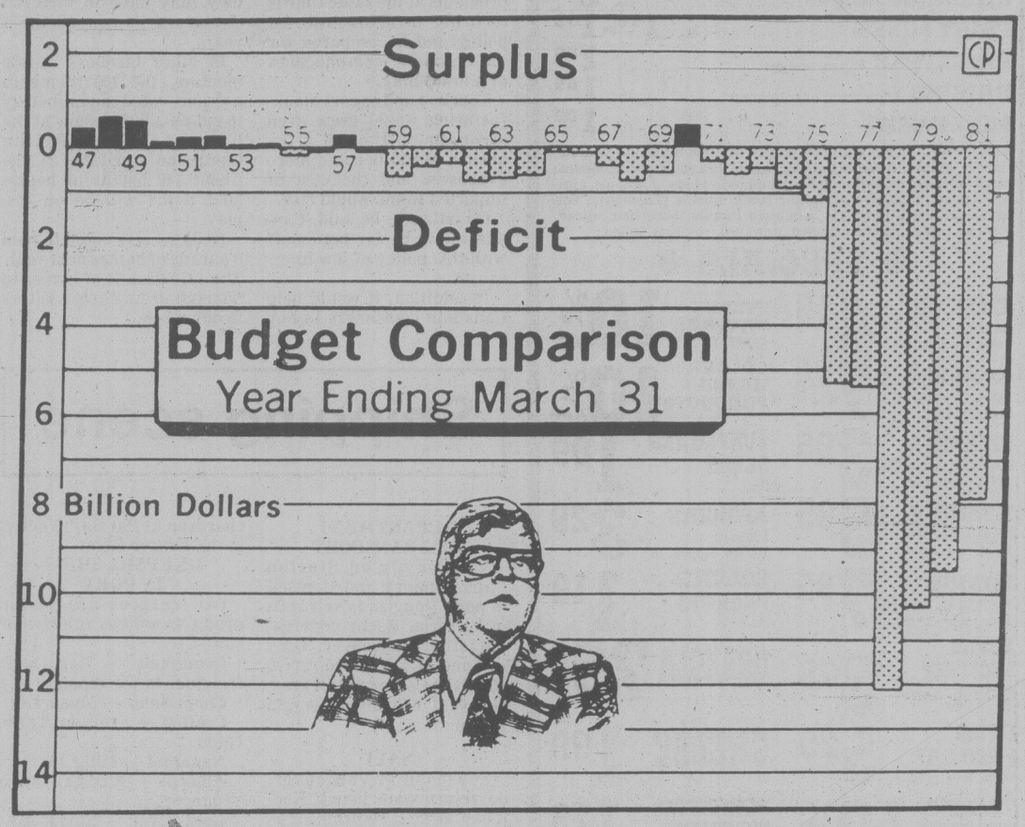

In future, even when a non-resident sells an operation and takes the income in the form of royalty interests, the revenue will be subject to a 46-per-cent corporate tax.

— Companies will no longer be able to avoid paying capital gains tax on operations they sell, simply by withdrawing the accumulated income froh the operatio for sale. Legitimate intercorporate transactions will still be allowed.

— Groups of Canadian-controlled private corporations, each currently entitled to a low federal tax rate of 15 per cent on up to $150,000 of business income will now be able to make use of the $150,000 limit only once.

— High-income individuals will no longer be allowed to make use of tax advantages which had been available for unregistered employee benefit plans. In the past, high-income individuals could contribute unlimited amounts to such plans without paying tax.

Now, the employer will not be able to deduct the contributions until the funds can be used by the employee — at which point they are taxed.

Critics say Crosbie 'dumps on women'

TORONTO (CP) — A spokeman for women's groups across Canada says Finance Minister John Crosbie "dumps on women" in his budget released Tuesday.

Laurel Ritchie, a spokesman for the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, an umbrella group for women's organizations, said:

"The government has shown some small mercy for wives working in unincorporated farms and businesses," she said. "But over-all, it is looking to only balancing the budget as if it were running a business."

She said the role of government is to balance this need against human and social need.

"High energy costs spell disaster for women who are the majority of Canada's low income earners and the first to be laid off in industries which cut back due to those high energy costs."

Particularly infuriated with the increase in unemployment insurance premiums is Lynn Gordon, chairman of the Ontario Status of Women Council, who said women in low-paying jobs would be most hurt because the government is "taking money from the people who need it the most."

Judith Ramirez, director of the Toronto Immigrant Women's Centre, said for women working in "job ghettos" such as factories, the increase in unemployment premiums shows "a whole government trend against women.

"Wages aren't going to go up for these women and if they do lose their jobs it will be hard for them to collect unemployment insurance because of change in criteria."

Catharine Charlton, a spokesman for the Ontario Women's Progressive Conservative Association was more positive with regard to the budget's effects on women.

"I think the most outstanding feature for women was the item directed to small business," she said. "Now husbands can pay their wives salaries which will make a difference to a family's overall tax structure."

But Ms. Ritchie wanted to know what had happened to Conservative election promises to allow participation of housewives in the Canada Pension Plan.

"Where are the election promises to plan and beef up the enforcement for equal pay of equal value? Where is the strategy for job creation for women? Basically, this government doesn't give us any relief."

5-year scenario projects deficit cut of nearly 60%

OTTAWA (CP) — Five-year projections in Tuesday's federal budget call for a cut in the deficit of close to 60 per cent during the period, with spending increases restricted to that needed to cover inflation.

The projections are the first ever included in a federal budget and cover the government fiscal year ending March 31, 1980, through the year ending March 31, 1984.

Compared with fiscal 1979, projections show a 14-per-cent increase in government revenues to $44.8 billion during fiscal 1980 and a whopping 91-per-cent rise to $75.3 billion for fiscal 1984.

Government expenditures go up to $54.2 billion, an increase of 9.6 per cent from 1979, while 1984 spending is forecast to be $79.7 billion, up 60.9 per cent from 1979.

The deficit is projected to keep decreasing during the period to reach $4.4 billion in fiscal 1984, a cut of 56.7 per cent from 1979's deficit of $10.2 billion.

Figures are on the so-called national accounts basis, one of several ways of expressing government revenues and spending. They vary slightly from other systems of estimating these figures.

Accompanying the projections is a paper describing the underlying assumptions at this time. Projections will be updated annually.

Business investment continues to be the strongest source of economic growth through 1985, the paper says. Now growing at an annual rate of 10.6 per cent, this sector is forecast to record an annual average growth of 6.1 per cent between 1979 and 1985.

Spearheaded by business investment, the economy is expected to grow by an annual average of three per cent during the period, after inflation is subtracted.

The inflation rate, however, soars to double numbers from 1980 through 1982 in the scenario used by the government. Reasons for the assumption are the increase in energy prices, the higher excise tax on gasoline and diesel fuel, higher wage increases and continued strong growth in food and import prices.

But after a high of 11.4 per cent in 1981, the inflation rate steadily drops to reach 7.8 per cent in 1985.

While most forecasts show a non-cyclical decline in the inflation rate, no one knows when it will take hold.

If high interest rates continue and governments keep cutting spending, among other anti-inflation measures, the low-price scenario may prevail, the paper says.

In that case the inflation rate would hit the double-digit level in 1980 and 1981 and start dropping from an 11-per-cent level in 1980 to reach six per cent in 1985.

If anti-inflation policies continue and there is no energy or other economic crisis, "it is quite conceivable that our price performance could be even better than this low-price scenario suggests," the paper says.

The unemployment rate, now at an annualized rate of 7.3 per cent, is expected to continue to be high at an annual average of 7.7 per cent between 1979 and 1985.

The rate is estimated to reach 7.5 per cent this year, move up 8.3 per cent next year, then drop to 7.7 per cent in 1982, and remain at the 7.5-per-cent level through 1985.

Despite high unemployment and inflation rates, consumer spending is expected to grow more quickly than the economy this year and next, at rates of 3.1 per cent and 2.3 per cent, respectively.

Afterwards, it is expected to grow at the same pace as the economy at an average annual rate of 3.5 per cent.

Government spending, which includes all levels of government and both current and capital expenditures, will drop by two-tenths of one per cent this year and by three-tenths mf one per cent in 1980.

During 1981 through to 1985, spending will increase by an average annual rate of 1.2 per cent.

Growth in residential investment is expected to drop by nine per cent this year, but begin. perking up next year with a growth rate of 2.2 per csnt and go on to reach an average annual rate of 4.6 per cent between 1981 and 1985.

Finally, international trade is expected to slow down the economy in the short term. But after 1980 exports are projected to grow at an average annual rate of 4.6 per cent, a higher rate than that for imports at 4.2 per cent.

Tories gamble on 105,000 youth jobs

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

OTTAWA — The federal government is gambling that it can encourage the hard-pressed private sector to create an extra 105,000 permanent jobs next year for hard-core, unemployed youth — now one of the toughest problems confronting the Tory administration.

In an interview with FP News Services, Manpower Minister Ron Atkey said that a key budget proposal to double funding for a novel tax credit scheme could produce lasting private-sector jobs at half the cost of each short-term, make-work federal effort.

This massive shift in approach to unemployment will kill the $100 million Canada Works program next spring because these jobs end when federal funds cease. Tuesday night's budget offers $208 million in lucrative credits to employers to start jobs — with the federal prayer that these jobs will last.

"It's a calculated risk — our risk is that the jobs just won't be created — that there won't be the take-up," Atkey said. "I'm not convinced that we're going to have a really bad winter — I have yet to see the recession and I'm an optimist.

"But if there is a very low take-up, then come next July or August I'll have to start rethinking this thing."

The Liberals introduced the novel employment tax credit 18 months ago in an attempt to lure the private sector into creating permanent jobs — with a little help from the federal treasury. Employers received a tax credit of $1.50 per hour and they have managed to produce, so far, 58,000 jobs.

Economists estimate that 60 to 65 per cent of these jobs were really "new." That means that the $100 million program qualifies as the most successful federal scheme devised to cut Canada's 7.4 per cent unemployment rate.

Atkey said that his crucial budgetary dilemna was to stay within the existing $710 million ceiling while tackling the critical problem of youth unemployment. Young people aged 15 to 24 have an unemployment rate of 13.5 per cent. They represent almost 50 per cent of the unemployed and they drain $1.5 billion from the feds each year in unemployment payouts.

He chose to expand the experimental tax credit scheme.

Tuesday night's budget offers employers a tax credit of $80 per week for each job created for a young person. About 85,000 of these jobs must be proven new jobs that go to youths who have been unemployed for at least two weeks. The remaining 16,000 jobs do not need to be new but they must be given to hard-core unemployed who have been looking for work at least 13 weeks.

Atkey said that the credit will cost the feds $4,500 per job in lost tax revenue. He compared this figure with the Canada Works price tag of $10,000 for each short-term job.

"So here's the difference between the two (Liberal and Tory) philosophies," he said. "The previous government set aside a certain amount of money and it literally threw the money at young people saying 'you create the jobs' and, of course, they got all the money spent.

"We're saying that we've got money set aside and that the employers can create the jobs according to our guidelines. Our risk is not so much the abuses because we think they will create short-term jobs that are unnecessary because it isn't that rich a program.

"Our risk is that the jobs just won't be created."

Last night's debut of Atkey's long-promised employment strategy fulfils a touted Tory campaign pledge last spring to concentrate on the nagging problem of youth unemployment through the creation of permanent — not make-work — jobs.

The minister has also promised to enlist 14,000 young foks in a national youth service corps next summer and to expand federal training capacity for such critical skilled trades as welding.

Service corps projects would be established by existing non-profit groups such as the churches and YMCA — to avoid the spectre of political patronage. And the work must be of lasting community or environmental benefit such as park construction or playground clean-up.

Atkey has pledged to sell this package — especially the expanded tax credit scheme — to chambers of commerce and banks across the nation. He said that the new tax forms are streamlined for the credit and that the accountancy chores will be reduced.

"If the program works, you can create more jobs for the same dollars," he said. And if employers do not pick up the Tory challenge, Canadians will s,on see a very uncomfortable minister doing out another round of winter make-work chores.

ATKEY
. . . jobs at half the cost?

Budget highlights

The highlights of Finance Minister John Crosbie's Tuesday budget included:

No changes in personal income taxes.

An immediate increase in the federal excise tax on gasoline from the current sevens cents a gallon to 25 cents a gallon. Expected revenue to the federal government: $2.5 billion annually.

Increases in the price of domestic crude oil of $4 per barrel in 1980 and $4.50 a barrel each year until the end of 1983.

A rise in taxes on liquor, wine and beer. Changes will mean increases of 11 cents extra on a 25 oz. bottle of liquor, a 1 cent per bottle increase for beer (½ a cent for light beers), and a 13.3 cents extra for a bottle of wine.

An energy tax credit for lower and middle income taxpayers of $80 for each adult and $30 per child for families earning less than $21,380 a year.

A 5 percent surtax on corporate income tax.

Increased premiums paid by workers and employers to the unemployment insurance program.

Increased taxes on tobacco products of up to 2.5 cents for a pack of 20 cigarettes, adding some $85 million to the federal treasury.

Taxpayers employing their spouses in their businesses will be allowed to claim salaries paid.

The formation of a Canadian Energy Bank to fund energy projects across Canada.

The sale of 1 million ounces of gold by the treasury.

Allowances paid to volunteer firemen will have their tax exemptions increased from $300 to $500.

Effective dates

Today

Gasoline up 18 cents a gallon for private motorists, with 10-cent-a-gallon rebates for farmers, commercial fishermen and urban transit systems.

Tobacco prices up 2.5 cents per pack of 20. Alcohol up 11 cents per 25-ounce bottle of liquor, 24 cents per case of 24 regular beer and 12 cents per case of 24 light beer, and 13.3 cents per bottle of table wine.

Corporations to pay five per cent more of regular federal income tax payable until Dec. 31, 1981.

Small businesses temporarily eligible for development bonds at reduced interest rates.

Tax benefits reduced for oil and gas properties by cutting depreciation writeoff rates to 10 per cent from 30.

Once-in-a-lifetime deferral for farmers of tax on maximum $100,000 taxable capital gains from sale of farm if proceeds transferred to a registered retirement savings plan (RRSP).

Jan. 1, 1980

Domestic crude prices rise $1 a barrel, or 3.5 cents per gallon of gasoline, with 60-day period for price rise to reach consumer.

Maximum refundable energy tax credit of $40 per adult and $15 per child for lower- and middle-income families, rising to $80 per adult and $30 per child in 1981 and subsequent years.

Salaries paid to spouses by taxpayers who run unincorporated businesses can be claimed as taxable expenses.

Tax exemption on allowances paid volunteer firefighters raised to $500 from $300 per year.

July 1

Further $2-a-barrel crude oil increase, triggering 60-day cycle before consumers affected.

Oct. 1

Further $1-a-barrel crude oil increase.

Budget 'discouraging nonsense'

Two University of Victoria professors scanned Finance Minister John Crosbie's maiden budget this morning and rejected it as discouraging nonsense.

Economist Dr. Leonard Laudadio said: "It's a third rate document. There's nothing in it that could be called economics."

That was about the nicest thing he said.

"It's a Lougheed budget, prehistoric economics, antediluvian economics . . . not even good Conservative policy," Laudadio said.

Political scientist Dr. Walter Young said the budget's taxation measures are "scattergun, regressive, hitting everyone whether rich or poor. It's a discouraging budget."

The net effect will be to penalize the wage earners because higher corporate taxes will either be passed on to consumers or be wiped out by writeoffs such as depletion allowances and exploration credits.

Shell Oil last year paid no income tax, Young noted.

"It's a typical Tory budget in that it does more for the rich than it does for the poor," Young said.

"It's all very well to put a 24-cent tax on a case of beer. But the people who buy beer tend to be in the lower incomes. And if you're making $30,000 a year it is not difficult to pay another 20 cents a gallon for gas."

Young said the Conservative government seems determined to keep its election promise of reducing debt.

"Unfortunately they are locking us into a high rate of inflation — 11 per cent — and 8 per cent unemployment."

Young said he would have thought a government would have learned by this time not to impose regressive taxation.

And he agreed with Finance Minister Hugh Curtis that the budget does nothing for the construction industry.

Laudadio said he finds the argument for higher fuel taxes "economic nonsense."

He said he is not sure about the validity of the energy shortage in the first place but conceded a gradual increase in oil prices might be necessary as the resource depletes.

"But that's not what he's saying. He's saying the tax increase is necessary to balance the budget. That is economic nonsense . . . stupid."

Most conservatives in the world would say leave the economy alone and it will cure itself, Laudadio said.

He said corporate profits in recent years might have been excessive but workers are making less.

He also claimed the amount of tax that will be raised by the hikes on liquor and tobacco will not be great.

Home heating oil cost to double

OTTAWA (CP) — The price of home heating oil can be roughly expected to double over the next four years as a result of planned oil price increases announced in Tuesday's budget.

The government announced that, pending the settlement of a tax dispute with Alberta, domestic oil prices would increase by $4 a barrel next year and by $4.50 a barrel in each subsequent year until they approached 85 per cent of the average world price at Chicago, expected by Jan. 1, 1984.

The domestic price now is $13.75 a barrel, about $10 below the current average world price. Each $1 a barrel increase adds about 3.5 cents a gallon to the price of gasoline and home heating oil.

With oil prices forecast to increase by nearly $20 a barrel through Jan. 1, 1984, home heating oil costs would rise by about 70 cents a gallon.

The average current price of home heating oil is about 70 cents a gallon.

The first increase will occur Jan. 1 at the rate of $1 a barrel. Since the increases are not passed on at the retail level for 60 days after being imposed, to use up existing stocks, consumers can expect higher bills in March.

A $2-a-barrel hike is scheduled for July 1 and another $1 Oct. 1. After that, the price would rise by $2.25 a barrel every six months beginning Jan. 1, 1981. Each increase would be felt by consumers 60 days later.

Meanwhile, latest National Energy Board projections indicate that supplies of home heating oil this winter are very tight across the country.

The new Progressive Conservative government has conceded the possibility of limited shortages and has urged consumers to conserve oil and gasoline wherever possible.

Tough budget holds little immediate relief will go up by $1 a barrel Jan. 1 — exactly as the former Liberal government planned.

Without the crucial $4-a-barrel price increase next year, followed by larger increases to the mid-1980s, the bottom falls out of Crosbie's economic plans.

And those plans are ambitious.

The finance minister expects to cut the government's annual spending deficit in half within the next four years. That means knocking about $1 billion off the troublesome deficit every year until 1984.

Crosbie intends to entice thousands of ordinary Canadians into investing their savings in the stock market, so homegrown companies will have a new pool of funds to expand and hire more workers.

He expects the economy to hum along at a respectable 3.5 to four-per-cent annual rate of growth for the next four years, in spite of dire warnings that the United States is headed into a deep and prolonged recession and the fact that the economy has been able to chalk up only a disappointing 2.8 per cent growth rate so far this year.

The main source of funds to bring about Crosbie's comfortable scenario for the 1980s is the $17 billion he hopes to raise by taxing oil and natural gas revenues in the next four years.

Another important source of cash — which came as a surprise to many observers — is a five per cent surtax Crosbie is imposing on the corporate sector for the next two years. He expects this to yield $370 million by the end of 1981.

The tobacco and liquor taxes are minor sources of revenue, yielding about $20 million apiece next year.

In contrast to Crosbie's optimism about his ability to get the government's deficit under control, he appeared unsure and worried about the prospects for reducing the country's foreign debt, which he estimated at close to $7 billion.

Although this is the same reduction the finance minister has been making since mid-summer, a significant change has occurred since Crosbie first made the forecast.

His original $7-billion deficit did not take into account the fact that Canada would decide to sell $2-billion-worth of natural gas to the United States next year.

Instead of reducing the staggering imbalance in foreign transactions, as one might expect, the massive gas sales left it exactly where Crosbie had put it five months ago.

Improving this international problem ranks second only to reducing inflation in the government's economic priorities, Crosbie said.

But he added: "Most projections suggest that the current account deficit will continue to widen, mainly because of the growing burden of interest payments."

Despite the nagging burden of watching the nation fall ever more in hock to foreign bankers, Crosbie was confident that better times lie ahead for Canada.

Reaching back into history for a powerful phrase to convey this optimism, Crosbie reminded fellow MPs how Sir Wilfrid Laurier had promised the 20th century would belong to Canada.

So far, it doesn't look that way, he conceded.

"But if our fiscal and energy policies are adopted, the 1990s will indeed belong to Canada."

The only group likely to share his budget night enthusiasm is that fortunate segment of the population with $20,000 sitting around to invest in the stock market.

Crosbie introduced a new plan, which works much like the existing Registered Retirement Savings Plan, to allow ordinary taxpayers to avoid paying taxes by investing in Canadian companies.

The taxpayer is allowed to set up a fund, known as Common Stock Investment Plan, into which he can place up to $20,000 next year and $10,000 each subsequent year. When he withdraws the money, the government would permit him to do it without paying capital gains tax.

The government is using this generous tax deferral scheme to get money into the hands of corporate planners. Unlike his predecessors, Crosbie decided to do this by offering his incentives mainly to would-be investors, not to the corporations themselves.

As a second enticement to Canadians to buy common stocks, Crosbie offered a new tax break on RRSP money.

RRSP funds, put into common stocks, will qualify for a tax exemption when the taxpayer decides to cash in his retirement plan.

The largest business incentive in the budget — which appears to have been a response to the outcry against high interest rates imposed by the Clark government — is a new plan to help small businessmen borrow money without paying crippling debt charges.

Crosbie has decided to allow small businessmen to issue bonds worth up to $500,000 instead of approaching their banker for a loan at the current 16 per cent interest rate.

Instead of making interest payments to the bank, the businessman would be allowed to make so-called dividend payments to the bondholder. These dividends — unlike interest payments — would not be taxed by the government. This effectively cuts the cost of borrowing almost in half for the small businessman.

The offerings were meagre, as Crosbie had warned the nation they would be.

But he insisted this stingy basket of goodies was the only way to get the country to face economic reality.

"This I am determined to do even if it means risking some unpopularity."

Gold bars will fetch about $445 million for Canada

Canada to cash in on gold fever

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada is going to cash in on the current international gold fever by selling one million ounces of the yellow metal — worth about $445 million U.S. — in the near future.

Finance Minister Crosbie said in his budget speech Tuesday night that the sale will allow Canada to put its international reserves in better order and will provide more funds to invest in interest-earning assets.

Canada now has 22 million ounces of gold in its international reserves. They are listed as being worth $1 billion, based on an official valuation of about $45.60 U.S. an ounce, instead of the international market value of $445 an ounce.

Crosbie said some of the one million ounces will be sold to the Canadian Mint for its gold-coin program and the rest will go into the open market.

The amount scheduled for sale equals the average quantity sold in comparable U.S. gold auctions in recent years.

He said Canada's gold holdings now represent about 75 per cent of its international reserves at current market prices. That was a greater proportion than Canada had held in the past and was higher than the percentage held by most other industrial countries.

Canada's official international reserves are made up of U.S. dollars, other foreign currencies, gold and special drawing rights under the International Monetary Fund.

At the end of last month, they totalled $3.97 billion. Crosbie gave no indication of when the gold sale will take place.

Projections 'very dodgy'

FP News Service

Tuesday's budget was "the worst in living memory to prepare," a senior official in the finance department says. What is more, he says, the five-year projections at the heart of the budget are "very dodgy indeed."

Because Finance Minister John Crosbie insisted on long-range planning, department experts spent weeks working out what major economic indicators, from the Gross National Product to tax receipts, would look like in 1984, the final year of the plan.

"But every time we'd get our figuring done," this source reports, "there would be another change in oil prices or energy policy, and everything would go up in smoke."

So, about a month ago, department officials urged the minister to allow them to make assumptions about energy planning, and to commit themselves on the basis of these assumptions.

That is why the budget documents assume, for example, that agreement will be reached on oil-pricing policies with the producing provinces. The assumption is that oil will go up $4 a barrel in 1980 and $4.50 annually thereafter. If agreement is not reached at this level, the basis of major parts of the budget becomes suspect.

"But at least we had something to go on."

The department's problems were only beginning, however.

"In the past we haven't tried to make projections five years ahead, because we didn't trust them. A tiny change today becomes a huge bulge out there, in 1982. This time, we had to.

"So when the figures come out wrong, we're going to get blamed."

On Monday, the day before budget day, senior officials sat down with Crosbie for what is called "dirty question time." They asked him the rudest questions they could think of concerning the budget, in rehearsal for the barrage he would face when it became public. A lot of the questions turned on the future projections.

"The minister made a lot of jokes, and laughed a lot. We laughed, too.

"I hope we are laughing at the same things."

UIC premiums to jump

OTTAWA (CP) — Employers and employees will have to pay 18.5-per-cent higher unemployment insurance premiums in 1980 under the new budget.

At the same time, benefits to unemployment insurance claimants are going to rise by only 9.4 per cent.

The maximum annual premiums paid by employers rises Jan. 1 to $308 from $260 this year. Employees will pay a maximum $241, compared with $186 now.

Maximum benefits increase to $174 weekly from $159.

Premiums are paid by everyone in the labor force who works at least 30 hours weekly or earns at least $87 weekly through sales commissions or similar non-salaried work.

The government expects to take in an extra $800 million from the increase and use most of it to eliminate its share of the cost of $500 million in benefits and $250 million in job-finding services.

As of Jan. 1, individual employees will be charged a weekly $1.60 premium for each $100 earned up to a maximum weekly salary of $290. The employee premium now is $1.35 per $100 to a maximum weekly salary of $265.

That means the maximum weekly premium increases from $3.58 to $4.64.

The comparable employer premium rises to $2.24 per $100, up from $1.89 this year.

Outlook's bad for suite dwellers

The federal budget will make worse the plight of apartment dwellers in B.C., Finance Minister Hugh Curtis has warned.

Curtis described as "ridiculous" elimination of the capital cost allowance for multiple-unit dwellings and lack of action against high interest rates.

He said Tuesday the budget has removed all incentives to build new apartments.

Finance Minister John Crosbie said he is eliminating the allowance because the pressure on vacancy rates is not as serious as in the past.

"From B.C.'s point of view, it's ridiculous," said Curtis.

"I can only assume someone told him vacancy rates were low in Ontario and perhaps Quebec, but in B.C. it's exactly the reverse."

The vacancy rate in Greater Victoria is currently almost nil.

Curtis said the forest industry will also be hurt because of the drop in apartment construction.

He said the budget is nevertheless a courageous one for a minority government and said the increased taxes on gasoline, liquor and tobacco point out the serious financial situation Canada is in.

NDP finance critic Dave Stupich said the budget is a disaster, which will only fuel inflation and drive the unemployment rate higher.

"He (Crosbie) is predicting double-digit inflation and in the face of that is taking more moeny out of the economy. It seems he is taking the wrong steps to try to get the economy moving. This budget is leading to a disaster for the working people of the country."

Business leaders agreed the budget is reasonable and realistic.

Bruce Pepper, managing director of the Vancouver Board of Trade, said the general thrust of the budget is good and represents a more modest demand on taxpayers than might reasonably have been expected.

He said the new 18-cent-a-gallon excise tax on gasoline is modest and most Canadians should be able to handle it.

The organization representing B.C.'s $3-billion-a-year forest industry argued that the rebate to protect farmers and fishermen from the full brunt of fuel price increases should be extended to fuel used in the production of forest products as well.

Norman Dusting, of the Council of Forest Industries, said forest products are big-ticket export items that help reduce Canada's unfavorable balance of payments. Because the prices of many forest products are competitively set in world markets, producers will have to absorb higher fuel costs, cutting profits and the amount of capital available for reinvestment and expansion.

Increased taxes on gasoline, and aviation and deisel fuel will make mineral exploration more expensive, says the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines.

"One of our blessings in the West has been highly innovative and competitive exploration and this will mean exploration managers will have a further spur to be even better at their jobs than they are today," said Rick Higgs, chamber manager.

No more SIN to cash bonds

OTTAWA (CP) — If you drop into your bank today to cash Canada Savings Bond coupons, the teller will not withhold 25 per cent of its value even if you refuse to divulge your social insurance number or don't have one.

Finance Minister John Crosbie's budget Tuesday night finally put an end to a procedure that often angered holders of government or other bearer bonds and helped fire public resentment against alleged misuse of the social insurance number (SIN) system.

Under the old regulations, the bank withheld the 25 per cent — in the absence of a SIN number — for the national revenue department, against possible tax payments on interest earned. Now failure to provide the number "when cashing interest coupons on bonds will no longer result in 25 per cent of the interest payment being withheld," Crosbie said.

Since taxpayers must collect $1,000 in interest before paying tax on it, most Canadians never had to pay up. But they did have to file an income tax return to get back their 25 per cent.

It was particularly irksome to elderly people who never had a social insurance number, finance department spokesman said.

Although the regulation goes into effect today, it was announced in principle last month so banks and similar institutions would be warned in advance.

The change is ssen as part of the new Progressive Conservative government's policy, promised in the May 22 election campaign, to discontinue use of SIN in other administrative activities.

Critics have charged that the numbers are used in compiling information on citizens that is not related to insurance matters.

It's no budget for the poor

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister John Crosbie's first budget will provide no help for the millions of Canadians living below the poverty line, says a spokesman for the Canadian Council on Social Development.

"It will just expand the number of poor people," said the group's executive-director, Pierre Bourdon. "This government is giving no serious indication that it is going to change that situation."

Labor fumes at 'disaster'

B.C. labor leaders were steaming today over Finance Minister John Crosbie's budget.

They angrily described it as a disaster and "totally without mercy" for workers.

"There is scant regard for people in need, the disadvantaged," said Larry Ryan, secretary of the Victoria Labor Council.

"It is a reflection of the cold, callous, capitalistic system all the way.

"It is designed to bolster private enterprise at any cost."

Victoria businessmen agreed the federal budget is strong medicine but said it is probably necessary.

At the same time, the business spokesmen expressed concern about rising prices — including probably increases in ferry fares, food prices and all types of consumer goods that are transported to the city.

Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. Federation of Labor, called on the opposition parties to bring the Tory government down because the budget will encourage unemployment, stimulate inflation and add to the financial burden of working people.

He said the budget will guarantee one million unemployed for the next two to three years.

Jack Munro, western regional president of the International Woodworkers of America, labelled the budget "a complete and total disaster."

"I hope Crosbie goes down in history books as the man whose budget defeated the Tories forever and a day," he said.

Munro said there is no excuse for the government to penalize the workers who, he added, have shown restraint over the past few years.

"What is our reward for that restraint? We are penalized."

Munro said there is nothing in the budget for western Canada other than for the oil companies in Alberta and certainly nothing to stimulate B.C. housing in order avert large layoffs in the forest industry.

"We know that there are going to be 11,000 laid off during the Christms holidays," Munro said.

Munro and other IWA officials met today with Premier Bill Bennett to discuss measures to stimulate the housing industry, now in a slump primarily because of soaring mortgage interest rates.

The IWA leader said Tory governments have a habit of moving in the wrong direction.

He said the way to solve the country's current problems is to put more purchasing power in the hands of consumers.

"To do that you should put more people to work to stimulate the economy and not drive it further into a recession."

John Shields, president of the Victoria Labor Council, said it was a recessionary budget that will cause more unemployment and provide less income for working people in Victoria.

The Tory government, which at one time promised to cut taxes, has now lost its credibility, Shields said.

John Schibli, secretary-treasurer of the Vancouver Island Building and Construction Trades Council, said there is nothing in the budget to stimulate the construction industry on Vancouver Island.

In fact, because of increased energy prices, the cost of construction will probably go up "without our guys getting any benefit."

Schibli said the workers' major problems are inflation and unemployment and the Tory government should have tackled them.

"But by his (Crosbie's) own admission these things are going to get worse."

The government should have moved to lower the mortgage interest rates and resurrected tax shelters for housing developments, Schibli said.

The Victoria business spokesmen said they too are worried about the effect on low income groups and Victoria's large retirement community, many of whom are living on fixed incomes.

Incoming Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele called it a "bite-the-bullet budget" that will help reduce the federal deficit and would move Canada towards energy self-sufficiency.

He said the budget is so controversial it could provoke an election.

"On balance I think these strong measures were probably necessary," he said.

At the same time, he said he is alarmed that Crosbie seems content to accept a 1980 inflation rate of 10 per cent.

"That's a frightening level."

He said Victoria's retired citizens are going to watch their spending power eroding away month by month.

The gas prices increases were a stiff jolt but there were budget improvements for Victoria's many small businessmen.

Ian Cass, executive vice president of the Victoria branch of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, also found the budget "tough-but-necessary" but was strongly critical of the government for failing to extend beyond Dec. 31 the capital cost allowance provisions for multiple-family housing.

He said the federal government was reacting to housing conditions in central and eastern Canada. The needs of Victoria, which has the lowest vacancy rate in Canada, were being ignored.

Cass said he will immediately protest to Defence Minister Allan McKinnon (PC-Victoria) and Don Munro (PC-Esquimalt-Saanich).

Unless action is taken immediately to increase the supply of apartments, Victoria faces an extremely serious housing crisis, Cass said.

Bill Anderson, incoming chamber vice president in charge of transportation, expresed concern that B.C. Ferries may have to increase its fares as a result of higher fuel prices.

Anderson said Victoria relies upon transportation more than most other communities and would be seriously affected by the new gas prices.

Almost everything bought in stores comes from the Lower Mainland or from other outside sources, he said.

At the same time, he said, the government's aim to discourage gasoline consumption probably won't be achieved.

"Maybe a few people will start taking the bus but most people will continue to drive. The only thing that really works is gas rationing. If I were limited to 50 gallons a month I know I wouldn't take my car to work unless it were absolutely necessary."

The only advantage to the budget, he added, is that it will prove to working people that voting for the Tories was no better than voting for the Liberals.

Consumer ends up paying

Although individual drivers will have to pay the higher levels, the increase "is going to be borne mostly by the businessman, and that will likely pass through the market to the consumer," he said.

Doug McLeod, president of Teamsters union Local 31 in Vancouver, forecasts higher truckers' costs.

"Companies are going to have to apply for higher freight tariffs to meet the cost," he said. "It's going to be a definite influence of the cost of the whole operation."

Teamsters are locked into a contract until the end of 1980 and cannot demand higher wages to compensate for the increased fuel costs, McLeod said.

Taxi rates will also have to go up as a result of the gasoline tax, Blue Bird manager Bruce Woodward said today.

"We can't absorb cost increases of that amount. They will have to be passed along to the customer."

He said the company would begin a study to see how much of an increase should be applied for but it was too early to predict when an application for a rate hike would go forward.

The measures will push up the cost of getting to work or going between cities by bus or train, truck or plane, as well as private car.

An increased tax on gasoline and diesel oil boosts the fuel bill for urban transit systems by about 15 per cent and for inter-city routes by about 25 per cent.

This compares with an average increase of about 18 per cent on gas for private cars.

Fuel costs will climb even higher in coming months under another program to raise oil prices in stages next month and in July and October.

Most public transport fares are subject to regulation — sometimes subsidized — by municipal, provincial or federal governments. But all fares are likely to go up soon under the pressure of higher operating costs.

For example, a 50-cent bus ticket might well jump to 55 cents or more.

Until Tuesday night's budget, public transport systems generally were not required to pay the existing federal excise tax of seven cents a gallon on gasoline.

The new budget removes the exemption for buses, trucks, railways, planes, ships and vehicles run by provincial or municipal governments.

Municipalities will get a rebate of 10 cents a gallon on fuel for public transit buses, but that still leaves a 15-cent levy.

Also eligible for the 10-cents-a-gallon rebate are farmers and fishermen, when the gasoline or disel fuel is used for farming or commercial fishing.

The government says it will collect an estimated $2.5 billion a year from the increased fuel taxes for commercial and private vehicles.

Victoria gasoline prices will start at $1.31 in January and rise to $1.89 by July, 1983.)

Comparable New York rates at the same stages are given as $1.48 next month, $1.53 next summer, $1.58 a year from January and $1.93 in July, 1983.

The system of applying the excise tax is changed from a set number of cents a gallon to a percentage of the wholesale value — nine per cent.

The immediate impact amounts to only a tiny fraction of a cent per gallon, but it means the tax will rise in step with oil price increases scheduled for the next four years.

The budget delivers a double tax blow to purchasers of aircraft used for aerial photography, flying training, parachute jumping and recreation.

In addition to the higher fuel prices, purchasers of planes for these purposes will be subject for the first time to the nine-per-cent federal sales tax levied on manufactured goods.

Airplanes used exclusively for public transport of people or freight remain exempt from the sales tax.

Personal and corporate aircraft remain subject to the tax.

in the national assembly calling on Ottawa to abandon its 25-cent-a-gallon excise tax on gasoline.

Liberal Leader Claude Ryan said he was against the 300 per cent increase in the excise tax. "It's enormous. We deplore it along with the government."

One man who had kind words for the Tory budget was Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta.

Lougheed praised federal Finance Minister John Crosbie's courage in attacking the massive $10-billion federal deficit

"The defict has an effect on all of us in Canada," Lougheed told a news conference. "This budget will help strengthen the Canadian dollar."

The Alberta premier acknowledged the four-cents-per-litre increase in the price of gasoline would be a bitter pill to swallow. But it was time Canadians realized that a more "realistic" oil price was necessary to ensure self-sufficiency and to give the producing provinces fair return on their resources.

"There are no surprises in the budget. It reflects the fall agreement on energy pricing."

Spokesmen for Canadian oil companies were not as enthusiastic as Lougheed.

Most expressed disappointment at the budget, saying its energy proposals make it impossible to achieve self-sufficiency by 1990.

Spokesmen for the larger, mainly foreign-owned companies, however, had stronger criticism than representatives of smaller companies.

Fraser Allen, chairman of the Canadian Petroleum Association, which represents about 180 larger firms, said "it would appear the government has decided to focus on general revenue requirements at the expense of self-sufficiency."

Despite a realistic approach to the need for oil-price increases, the budget's taxation measures contradict the stated goal of 1990 self-sufficiency, Allen said.

In Ottawa, the government budget announcement of a five-per-cent corporate surtax drew a mixed reaction from Sam Hughes, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

"In a nutshell, we don't like it," he told reporters. "The timing is wrong because this is the time when business should be setting money aside to invest in new plant and equipment.

"But we are prepared as a business community to play our part in fighting inflation."

Municipal rec centres put the squeeze on historic club

Club general manager Ernst Rieder . . . desperate situation

Club members Susan Webb, Loretta Griffin . . . ever the optimists

Game, set, match at Racquet Club?

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Life was simpler in 1886, and the genteel folk who formed a club to play pit-a-pat with racquet and ball would no doubt be baffled by the problems of their 20th century counterparts who belong to the Racquet Club of Victoria.

It was called the Victoria Lawn Tennis Club in those happier days when the clubhouse was on Belcher — now Rockland Avenue — between Cook and Vancouver.

There were changes over the years, including the name, which became the Victoria Lawn Tennis and Badminton Club.

In 1910, the club moved to 1920 Foul Bay Road to a building which was demolished in 1966 to make way for the shopping centre that now stands there.

The club stayed for 57 years, and club stories tended to stay on the sports pages where the members wanted to see news of what was happening at the club.

But in the heady days of 1966, with visions of Expo dancing in Canadian heads, the Racquet Club of Victoria (another name change had occurred) approved plans for a modern $750,000 complex on a 6.5-acre site at McKenzie Avenue and Gordon Head Road.

The decision — it seemed liked an extension of halcyon days — would actually lead to more than a decade of financial grief.

On Nov. 2, 1966, then Saanich reeve Hugh Curtis turned the sod for the new building, and a year later it opened.

Officials commented about how well the project had progressed.

As it turned out, it wasn't a portent of the future.

A hint of future woes can be found in the Times of Sept. 23, 1970, in a story telling of Victoria city council's finance committee decision to turn down a request for a $60 grant for a permanent trophy and four miniature trophies on the grounds that it was "a rich man's club."

It was among the first pilgrimages for municipal money club officials were to make, and later attempts, often for tens of thousands of dollars, were to meet with the same lack of success.

Despite the vigorous protests of club officials over the years that club members were mostly middle-class citizens who had to give up a lot of other things to be able to afford to join the RCV, it never lost the image and the label that it was for monied folk.

It was certainly never a rich club — club treasurer Ian Cairns told the Racquet Club of Victoria Holdings members Monday night the club had operated in the black in only one of the last 13 years.

Checking newspaper files for those 13 years is a repetitious procedure.

The club returned time and again to Saanich council in an attempt to get relief from its tax burden.

After council refused to help in 1971, the club suggested it might have to build a highrise apartment building on the site to balance its books.

Some aldermen considered the comment a threat, and reminded club officials they'd still have to come to council for rezoning permission.

The antagonistic attitude was to prevail right through the 70s.

There was temporary relief in 1973 when the club sold 2½ acres of its property for $330,000.

In 1977, an unnamed entrepreneur offered to buy the club. But nothing came of the suggestion.

That was the year taxes soared from $25,000 to $64,000 while membership had dwindled from 900 to 600.

Incredibly, it was in the same year that rumors of the club being for sale were squelched by club vice-president Glenn Anderson.

The club is now the healthiest it's ever been and out of the dire financial straits it appeared to be in because of a successful membership drive, Anderson said.

"The financial situation has taken care of itself by the increased membership."

An earlier membership drive had flopped.

In January, 1978, the assessed value of the club was reduced from $450,000 to $100.

That was good news while it lasted but the province and Saanich council both reacted angrily and the case was appealed.

By June, the word was out — the club would have to pay its full taxes.

It was when the reduced assessment was first in the news that the club was criticized by the president of the Saanich Community Club, who said that if the Racquet Club wasn't run on a businesslike basis, the public shouldn't be expected to pick up the tab.

It was the advent of new municipally-owned recreation centres that put the squeeze on Racquet Club membership.

In August of this year, club officials were saying the future was much brighter, thanks to a tax break from the assessment appeal board, a successful membership debenture drive and a determined attitude by members.

Following Monday night's meeting when the decision was made to dispose, lease or otherwise do something with its assets, the club's troubled past is matched only by its uncertain future.

Sturrock heads purchase study

Saanich Ald. Howard Sturrock was named Tuesday to head a committee to look into the possible acquisition of the Racquet Club of Victoria.

His appointment was announced by Mayor Mel Couvelier after club shareholders voted Monday to authorize directors to sell, lease or otherwise dispose of club assets.

Sturrock's terms of reference are to:

Examine the possibility of financial assistance from senior governments.

Come up with a projection of the annual operating deficit under municipal administration.

Study the impact on other Saanich neighborhoods relating to an imbalance of recreation facilities in the Gordon Head area.

max low

Less than two weeks to the magic hour and, as the countdown begins, our thoughts really start to zero in on cards, presents and puddings.

Puddings, you say? Of course, but while they're cooking we'll get on with the rest of the pre-Christmas chores.

Very first card I received was a pretty blue one from the Motor-Vehicle Branch. Oh no, how much do they want or what have I done now? They were the initial reactions but inside was a greeting which said: "Gently does it this holiday season."

Safe-driving tips the branch hoped I'd pass on to readers as a service to my community included replacing old windshield wiper blades, never mixing regular snow tires with radials, carrying a bag of sand and a shovel in the trunk, and packing a survival kit in there, too, with a warm blanket and an extra coat.

And tucked inside the card was a word of wisdom:

"Brake gently in all hazardous winter driving conditions and you'll arrive safe and more relaxed."

Present-buying has become the biggest headache. What to buy, whether it will fit and whether we've spent enough obsess us at this time of year.

Many have long felt that too much emphasis has been placed on spending at Christmas and one reader, a senior citizen with three families here in Victoria (her own children, grandchildren and a couple of great grandchildren) phoned with a different idea.

"I've told all those in my family not to give me expensive gifts and I've decided that for every dollar I spend on Christmas, I'm going to give a dollar to charity," the woman said.

She criticized the ridiculous idea that you "have to go out and spend this horrible lot of money" but she said it isn't something new.

"However, it is something that's got more horrendous because of inflation," the caller pointed out. "And, as you look around the world you realize our own Christmas trees are an embarrassment."

People feel in a bind, the woman said. They feel they have to go out and buy these expensive things, but they don't.

"We must all return to the basics of small token gifts, wrapped and put by the tree," she added. "People have to realize they still can give simpler gifts and that the important thing is not to go out and buy presents because you need to but because you'd like to."

Back to the puddings, which Virginia Careless of the Provincial Museum's history division was dishing up the other night at the Newcombe Auditorium. Christmas puds they were, complete with a delicious lemon sauce. Really!

They were gobbled up at the end of a rather unusual talk by Virginia on festive treats of Victoria's Christmas past.

Most people probably believe there is only one kind of Christmas or plum pudding but this just isn't so, said Virginia. In the "past" which she researched (1861 to the early 1900s) there were many kinds of steamed puddings which were eaten all through the year. One book printed in the 19th Century offered 370 pudding recipes.

"The trouble is, the only time most people have tasted steamed puddings is at Christmas when they are already stuffed!" said Virginia.

And that brings us to another seasonal problem — over indulgence.

When thinking not only of driving but of many things from presents to puddings, the Motor-Vehicle Branch's message "Gently does it this holiday season" could be good advice to follow.

Remembering for a moment that Christmas is meant to celebrate Christ's birthday, "gentle" is such a beautiful word . . .

Tonight's the last chance to get liquor at old prices

If you want to lay in your Christmas liquor supply at the old prices you will have to shop tonight.

The 208 liquor stores in B.C. have been ordered to take an inventory of their stock and new prices are expected to be tacked on Thursday.

Liquor board officials are huddling in Vancouver to work out the new price schedule following Finance Minister John Crosbie's announcement Tuesday in his budget speech that federal taxes on liquor, tobacco and gasoline have been increased.

While the gasoline tax hike of 18 per cent has had a clear cut impact — motorists this morning woke up to find the litre price of gas four to five cents higher — the effect of the tax increases on liquor and tobacco is not immediately known.

One local tobacco wholesaler said he doubted there would be any change in price until new stocks start rolling in. There is about a week's supply in Victoria and until that is depleted prices will be unchanged.

The federal government will be taking 2.5 cents more tax on a package of 20 cigarettes and 15.7 cents more on a pound of tobacco. But the distributors are expected to tack on an additional charge of their own.

A Victoria retailer felt it will mean smokers will have to pay about five cents more per package of 20, bringing the price to 93 to 95 cents.

In addition there is a manufacturer's increase on tobacco products due to come into effect Jan. 1. That will bring the price of a package of 20 cigarettes to between 98 cents to $1.

Crosbie estimated the government will increase its revenue during the first year by $130 million for alcohol products and by $85 million for tobacco products because of the changes.

Taxes on hard liquor, except for brandy, rise by 11 cents per 25-ounce bottle. The price of regular beer will rise by 24 cents per case of 24 while the cost of light beer goes up by 12 cents per 24. The tax on malt beer, however, drops by 12 cents per case of 24.

The average 25-ounce bottle of table wine, with an alcohol content between seven and 14 per cent, will increase by 13.3 cents.

The price of a bottle of wine with an alcohol content less than seven per cent rises by 6.2 cents. Bottles of wine with an alcohol content exceeding 14 per cent increase by 43.9 cents.

Bottles of sparkling wine will decrease by more than $1 a gallon. They are now taxed at the rate of $2.55 a gallon, regardless of alcohol content. They now will be taxed at the same rates as still wines.

Crosbie said the changes mean equal levels of alcoholic content in spirits, wine and beer will be taxed equally.

Sticky situation

City police are sinking their teeth into an offbeat break-in at Viteway Bakery, 753 View, early today.

But it's nothing compared to what the thief — probably on the young side — found to chew on.

Officers found the front window of the bakery had been smashed and called the shop owner.

The owner did a quick inventory and reported the loss — a case of apricot chewy bars.

Injunction talk on chimneys

Fireplace equipment industry representatives were to meet with Fire Commissioner Gordon Anderson in Vancouver today to appeal his ban on metal chimneys and zero clearance fireplaces.

If the appeal fails, the industry is contemplating going to court to apply for an injunction, a spokesman said.

Anderson's ban, announced Friday, created widespread controversy and confusion over the safety of the metal fireplace units.

Anderson said Tuesday he will recommend all building inpsectors in the province stop issuing permits for the installation of the units.

"I believe (they are) a hazard and I feel a responsibility to the people of British Columbia to inform them of that hazard," he said in an interview from Vancouver.

However, the major consumer testing organization which has certified them has denied they represent any danger.

"We tested them. If we had found them dangerous we would not have put our name on them," Reg Wright, Underwriters Laboratories of Canada spokesman, said.

[illegible]d his organization has had more complaints and problems with the traditional fireplace system.

"In the great majority of instances they are doing a great job if they are cleaned, inspected and maintained properly," he said. "If you fill your stove at night and let it go and do this day after day, however, there may be trouble."

But Commissioner Anderson said he has many examples of the chimneys failing, ranging over a number of brands of pipe.

There is no single feature of the pipes which fail, but the problems generally fall into three categories — corrosion on the outer surface of the inside pipe in the twin-piped design, creosote buildup on the surface and poor quality control in the manufactu[illegible]s.

Anderson's ban, endorsed by fire chiefs throughout the province, has provincial government officials pondering the legal force of such a ruling.

The building standards branch in the municipal affairs department, which acted with Anderson in revoking provincial approval, referred a reporter's inquiry to the attorney-general's department, which referred it back to the fire commissioner.

There seems to be no question that the commissioner has the authority to do what he did under provincial legislation, but there is uncertainty about how it conflicts with the National Building Code and other provincial and federal legislation.

The underwriters laboratory is re-examining its standards for evaluating the chimneys and fireplaces cited by Anderson, but they are still accepted under the code and by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. for CMHC-funded housing projects.

A possible clash could come when a developer or homeowner demands a building permit for the installation of such an appliance and he is refused by the inspector.

Little Gary Lupul a big Canuck now

Times News Services

A five-foot-eight centreman with a cocky attitude is helping keep Vancouver afloat during a critical time for the Canucks in the National Hockey League schedule.

Gary Lupul, recalled last weekend from Dallas of the Central Hockey League, scored for the third straight game and set up another goal Tuesday night as the Canucks held on for a 5-3 decision over Hartford Whalers in a dull game before 16,165 fans at Vancouver Coliseum.

"I've got that feeling right now that I can put the puck into the net every game," said Lupul. "Everything has fallen into place in the last few days and I'm working hard just to stay here."

Lupul, 20, a native of nearby Powell River, was signed by the Canucks as a free agent after he was passed over in the NHL entry draft during the summer. His size — 175 pounds — was supposed to be against him.

The former Victoria Cougar junior, however, has used his skating and quickness to score goals in Boston and Detroit and another important marker here against Hartford.

"I've got to keep playing him because of all the injuries here," said coach Harry Neale of the Canucks. "He's a cocky little guy and he's given us some spark.

"Right now he's an asset to the team and we'll keep playing him as long as he continues to work hard."

Lupul set up a goal by Chris Oddleifson late in the first period which broke a 1-1 tie, then scored himself just 30 seconds later on a pass from Oddleifson, giving the Canucks enough of a cushion for the rest of the night.

Jere Gillis later scored two more goals for the Canucks, one on a power play and another with a brilliant backhand shot, and captain Don Lever completed the Vancouver scoring. The Whalers got goals from Blaine Stoughton, Ron Plumb and Mike Rogers.

Lever opened scoring in the second minute with a blazing 50-foot shot from just inside the blue line and Stoughton tied the score at 4:57 with a perfect shot from the right faceoff circle after a smart pass from Greg Carroll.

Vancouver was without five regulars because of injuries and dressed centre Per-Olov Brasar, acquired Monday from Minnesota North Stars, and defenceman Bruce Affleck, promoted from Dallas. Brasar took a regular shift, but Affleck wasn't used.

Neale said his Canucks were fortunate to win because of five games in eight days recently on the road and credited the physical conditioning of the team for a stronger performance in the first two periods.

"We wouldn't have won this game at this stage last season, coming off a road trip like that," said Neale. "We're understaffed right now and just barely getting by with bodies from here and there."

Elsewhere, New York Islanders defeated Montreal Canadiens 4-1, New York Rangers beat Detroit Red Wings 2-1 and St. Louis Blues tied Pittsburgh Penguins 3-3.

Anders Kallur, a Swedish player, scored a shorthanded goal and set up a tally by Bryan Trottier in lifting New York to its victory over Montreal in a game that wasn't as close as the three-goal margin indicated.

"We never had a chance," said coach Bernie Geoffrion of the defending Stanley Cup champion Canadiens, who had their road winless streak extended to six games and find themselves with just two victories in the last nine contests.

Walt Tkaczuk scored a power-play goal at 18:53 of the first period to lead the Rangers past Detroit. Reed Larson opened the scoring for Detroit with an unassisted goal at 11:21 of the opening period. Don Maloney tied it when he skated from behind the Detroit net and beat goalie Rogie Vachon with a 15-foot wrist shot at 15:07.

Rick LaPointe turned Bernie Federko's pass into his fourth goal of the year with 6:09 left, giving St. Louis its tie with Pittsburgh. LaPointe's goal offset Peter Lee's unassisted score three minutes earlier for Pittsburgh.

Room-and-board rebellion

VANCOUVER (CP) — Members of Bellingham Blazers of the British Columbia Junior Hockey League refused to travel to Abbotsford for a game Tuesday night against the Flyers because of a dispute with team management over room and board costs.

Chet Corey, Blazers general manager, said in a telephone interview from Bellingham that the 21 players were upset over a decision by team owner Reijo Salminen that players' parents would have to pay room and board from Dec. 1.

Corey said the league agreed in November to study room and board costs and would support any team that asked parents to help out.

He said about 85 per cent of the Blazers parents agreed to pay the costs, estimated at about $110 a month, but three or four players could not come up with the money.

Following a meeting with Salminen on Sunday, the players decided to support their clubmates and not play the Flyers.

Salminen is in Europe on business and is expected back in 10 days.

Corey, who would like to have Tuesday's game rescheduled, said Bellingham has not been drawing fans.

He said he expects the problem to be resolved at a meeting Thursday with league president Ron Livingstone.

Geoffrion: the pressure starts to show through in only job he wanted

NEW YORK (AP) — When he became the coach of Montreal Canadiens, Bernie Geoffrion said the job was the only one he ever had wanted.

He welcomed the pressure from the no-nonsense fans and media in the National Hockey League's most demanding city. He welcomed the challenging prospect of heading the Canadiens toward a record-tying fifth consecutive championship, a mark set from 1955-56 through 1959-60 by the Montreal teams of which he was a member.

However, Bernie Geoffrion spent most of Monday night in meetings with Canadiens managing director Irving Grundman and team vice-president Toe Blake, who coached Geoffrion those record years.

They were not discussing the balmy weather in Uniondale, N.Y.; they were discussing why the Canadiens have gotten off to an uncharacteristic rocky start.

Chances are excellent they spent Tuesday night doing the same after Montreal dropped a 4-1 decision to New York Islanders for their sixth consecutive winless road game.

It is December and the playoffs are four months away. Only Philadelphia Flyers, unbeaten in 24 games since their only loss of the season, have escaped a slump similar to the one the Canadiens now endure. But the "It's Only December" excuse is not one to be embraced by a champion, and Montreal isn't using it.

"You always have to be concerned when things are going this way," said Grundman. "We have to get the guys playing as a team."

It leads one to wonder whether Geoffrion will get the chance to do that, though the Canadiens' 15 victories, nine losses and six ties is not dramatically worse than the 20-6-4 that started the 1978-79 campaign nor the 19-7-4 mark that commenced the season before.

So here is Bernie Geoffrion, in the only job he ever wanted, running the gauntlet before half a season has been played.

"You've got to give him a chance," said goalie Michel Larocque, who played superbly despite this latest loss. "If the fans are going to call for heads, I think the players' heads ought to roll first."

"I don't think there's any reason to sympathize with anybody," said Robinson. "Sympathy is reserved for losers and I don't think we consider ourselves losers."

"It's everybody's job to motivate, including his (Geoffrion's) job," added Gainey. "We can work on it more, and he can, too."

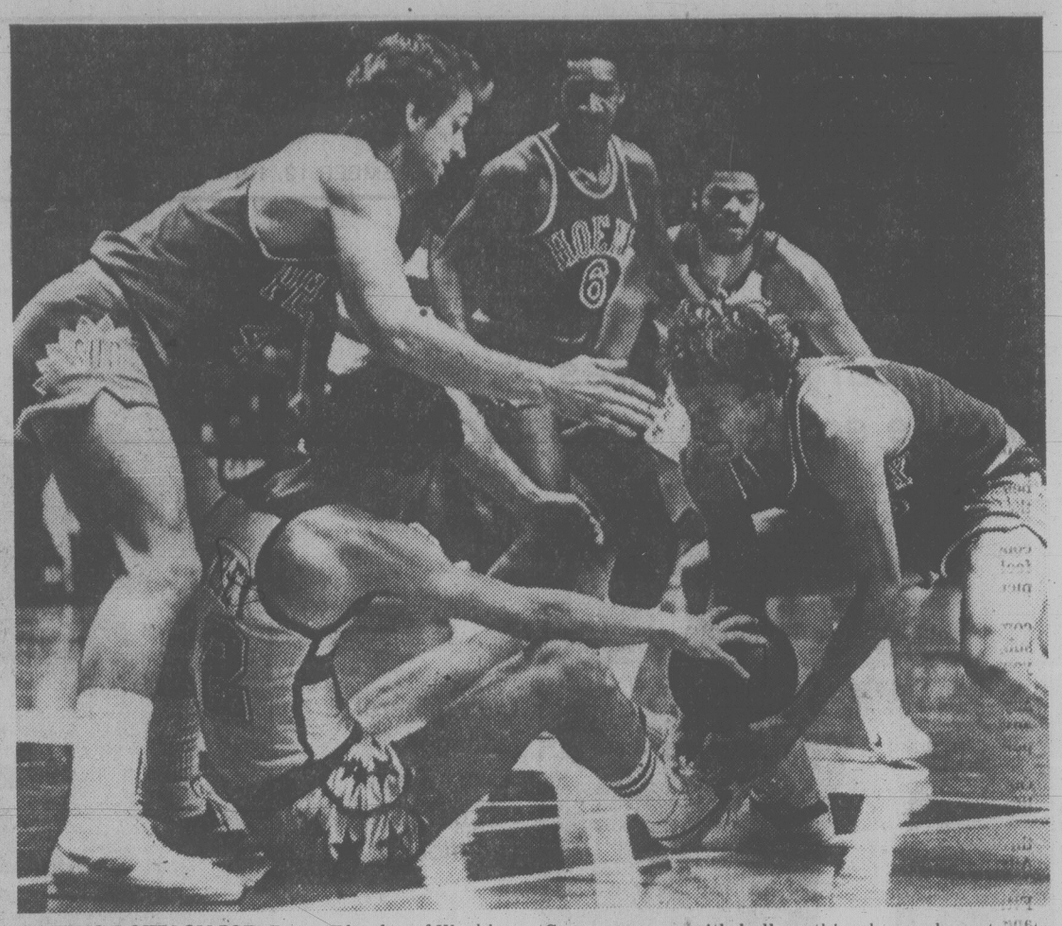

"I tell them how to play," countered Geoffrion. "There's a system. But if they don't want to execute it, what can I do? I feel bad, but if they don't want to put out, what can I do?

"I know I put out, I know I come to work, I work hard, I do my best. Gainey and (Guy) Lafleur, those guys must be sick and tired of working all the time while the rest, what are they doing?"

"What can I say? I don't know what to say," Geoffrion repeated.

Others are saying Geoffrion has not used his players wisely, that the disciplined defensive game the Canadiens played under Scotty Bowman has crumbled. They liken this team to 20 orphans with a new foster father, testing his patience to the breaking point.

They seem to be doing that quite well. Geoffrion's frustration with his players is showing — as is theirs with him. Don't expect the standoff to last too long.

Hassett's long-range skill ignites Pacer comeback

By Associated Press

Joey Hassett has become basketball's latest specialist — he's Indiana Pacers' designated three-point goal shooter.

Hassett, nicknamed Sonar because of his long-range shooting talent, struck again Tuesday night. After sitting on the bench the entire second half, he entered the game with New York Knicks leading 113-110 and two seconds showing on the clock in a National Basketball Association game.

Hassett raced free behind a screen, took an inbounds pass from Phil Chenier and lofted a three-pointer from the left side that went through at the buzzer, sending the game into overtime. The Pacers squandered a seven-point lead in the five-minute extra period but came back to win on Alex English's 13-foot jumper with 46 seconds left.

In other games, Denver Nuggets beat San Antonio Spurs 127-121, Seattle SuperSonics nipped Milwaukee Bucks 103-99, Chicago Bulls defeated Portland Trailblazers 104-93 and Phoenix Suns sunk Washington Bullets, 123-99.

"It's no secret he's the guy we go to in that situation," said Pacers coach Bobby Leonard. "We ran a decoy play and a pick to get him free and he had the shot we wanted."

Hassett, a third year pro from Providence, was signed by the Pacers after being cut by Seattle. He has connected on 17 of the long-range baskets. Earlier this season he tied a game against Utah with a three-pointer and won a game against Houston with three bombs in overtime.

"The three-pointer has certainly been good to me," Hassett said. "I used to shoot from there in college and we only got two points for it. Now that we get three, it's nice. My future is brighter now.

"It's an exciting rule for the fans, although not sometimes for the coaches," said Knicks coach Red Holzman.

The rule gives players three points for a shot made from beyond an arc ranging from 22 feet from the basket to 23 feet, six inches. The rule is being tested for one season.

Collapsible hoop rim answer to dunkers of Darryl Dawkins?

NEW YORK (AP) — Officials of the National Basketball Association have held a meeting with Chuck Randall, head basketball coach at Western Washington University, who has developed a collapsible basketball rim.

The rim is designed to fold away from the backboard when pressure of more than 260 pounds is applied, as when a player hangs on to it following a dunk shot or slams into it with his forearms. Then, by pushing a special latch, the rim can be placed back into position within minutes.

The NBA currently uses a rim that is attached rigidly to the backboard. Twice within the last month, Darryl Dawkins of Philadelphia '76ers has shattered backboards by making contact with the rim on dunk shots. Each game was delayed for more than one hour while a new backboard was installed.

In addition, NBA officials have been worried about the possibility of injury from falling glass from shattered backboards.

Last Friday, NBA commissioner Larry O'Brien instituted an automatic fine and suspension for any player who causes a backboard to shatter, whether his action is deemed intentional or not.

Ingemar makes it three

MADONNA DI CAMPIGLIO, Italy (AP) — Swedish superstar Ingemar Stenmark, again rallying in the second heat, won the men's giant slalom ski race today for his third straight World Cup victory.

Stenmark, 23, fifth after the first heat, was more than one second faster over his closest opponent in the second run to clock a winning total of 2:49.71.

Switzerland's Jacques Luethy came in second in 2:50.03 and rising Yugoslav star Bojan Krizaj was third in 2:50.86.

Austria's Hans Enn, fastest in the first heat, dropped back to fourth in 2:51.42.

The victory, his second in giant slalom, gave Stenmark 75 points in the men's overall World Cup standings.

Stenmark was clocked in a disappointing 1:23.25 in the first run, losing time in the final part of the course, but in the second heat he was timed in an unbeatable 1:26.46, best intermediate time.

Luethy had heat times of 1:23.32 and 1:27.54.

The race was held down the 1,600-metre Pancugolo track. The course dropped 450 metres, with 54 flags in both heats. The weather was sunny and cold.

Defending World Cup titlist Peter Luescher of Switzerland finished sixth.

Baseball a strong second . . . . . Basketball distant third

Football is top choice in U.S. sports survey

A poll taken around the time of the 1979 World Series indicates that football is the sport most followed in the United States, with baseball a strong second, basketball a very distant third and the rest of the sports trailing far behind.

And a survey of sports editors taken at the same time shows they are in agreement with their readers on sports interest.

On Oct. 15-16, a telephone survey conducted by The Associated Press and the NBC television network asked the following question: "Which sport would you say you are the most interested in . . . that is, which sports do you follow the most closely?"

Football was named by 47 per cent of the respondents. Baseball was listed by 33 per cent of the national sampling and basketball was chosen by [illegible].

Four per cent of the people surveyed picked tennis, three per cent chose golf and two per cent selected hockey. Soccer got a two per-cent response and bowling, wrestling and car racing each logged one per cent. Eleven per cent of those answering said they didn't follow sports.

The AP-NBC survey has a sampling of 1,600 people. A poll of that size has a three per-cent margin of error in either direction.

The AP asked sports editors across the country to "vote on what you think the relative importance of sports is to your readers." They were asked to rate the sports in order of importance.

The results there gave football a greater edge over baseball — 267 to 116. Basketball was listed as most important by 18 editors, hockey by two and horse racing, wrestling and skiing each by one.

Both surveys were intended only to gauge general impressions. It is understood that the timing and wording of any survey can alter the results. Baseball would seem to have an edge in the timing of the polls, since its premier event had centre stage, but both the professional and college football seasons had already begun.

Football and, to a lesser extent, basketball apparently profited from the interest in various levels of the sports. No attempt was made to differentiate among professional, college or high school levels in these sports because the surveys sought general impressions instead of specific information.

There is no major interest in baseball other than on the major league level.

For example, Bill Hageman, sports editor of the Delaware State [illegible], conducted his own survey in the spring of 1979 and got 75 reader responses ranking their favorite sports. Pro football was first, baseball was second, college football third, high school football fourth and University of Delaware football fifth.

The AP-NBC poll indicated that baseball interest rose as education and income declined, while the converse was true for football.

Forty per cent of the respondents making less than $8,000 and 26 per cent making more than $35,000 were baseball fans. Baseball ticket prices are significantly cheaper than pro football's. While 45 per cent of those with a grade school education are baseball fans, only 17 per cent of those with more than a college education are.

In addition, 23 per cent of those 18-24 years old followed baseball, while 45 per cent of those over 65 were most interested in baseball.

The regional breakdown of the AP-NBC poll reveals that football had strong national appeal, receiving nearly 50 per cent of the responses in all eight geographic areas.

Football was most popular in the Mountain States (Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming) with a 60 per cent response. This region has only one National Football League team — Denver Broncos — so it appears that many of the respondents were referring to college football.

The same conclusion could be reached in the Deep South (Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina), where Atlanta Falcons and New Orleans Saints are the only NFL teams, yet 55 per cent picked football as the sport they follow most closely.

Football is also big in the New South (Arkansas, Delaware, Washington D.C., Florida, Kentucky, Maryland North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia), where football outscored baseball by 2 to 1 (52-26 per cent).

Football, with 39 per cent, did worst in the New England states (Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont). College football in New England is on a smaller scale and there is only one NFL team, New England Patriots. Baseball, with 36 per cent, has only the Boston Red Sox, but they are probably the most popular team in the area.

Baseball made its best showing in the Pacific states (Alaska, California, Hawaii, Oregon and Washington), trailing football by one point, 41-40.

Baseball also did well in the Mid-Atlantic states (New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania), picking up 38 per cent of the respondents to football's 43.

In both the Industrial Midwest (Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin) and the Midwest Farm states (Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota), football had an eight per cent edge over baseball.

"There is no question that pro football is the one that has a grip over the entire country," said Bill Brill, sports editor of the Roanoke (Va.) Times and World.

"I think my readers are more interested in pro football, but I feel that's traceable mainly to type of scheduling in vogue in both sports," said Charles Karmosky, sports editor of the Daily Press in Newport News, Va.

"Daily baseball requires too much concentration over a long spell," Karmosky said. "The pro football scheduling thus gives it a distinct advantage — concentration again is in a much narrower time span — one day, and after a week of drudgery the average American overwhelmingly is ready to go all-out for the NFL Sunday action."

Basketball had a uniform response — about 10 per cent — in all eight regions of the AP-NBC poll and hockey fluctuated from a high of 14 per cent in New England to none in the Deep South.

Blacks appear more interested in basketball, with 27 per cent of the blacks surveyed listing it, compared to nine per cent of the whites.

There were no geographical breakdowns in the sports editors' survey since it was not conducted on a regional basis.

Neither poll distinguished whether the respondent preferred the sport as a spectator or a participant.

"Millions of people bowl," said Brill. "Few people care to read about bowling."

A wildlife photographer portrays his own feeling

stewart lang

Tim Fitzharris doesn't exactly fit the popular image of a wildlife photographer.

For one thing, you won't find him festooned with camera gear in the process of stalking big game animals with a long-barrelled lens. Not that he won't take pictures of mammals if the opportunity presents itself — he just doesn't actively seek them.

But wildlife, to him, encompasses everything found in the wild — insects, plants, flowers, mushrooms, trees, birds and mammals.

Fitzharris, at 31 among the leading nature photographers in Canada, moved to Victoria from Calgary this past summer. His general approach concentrates on the art behind picture-taking rather than the technical aspects of the pursuit.

Past the stage of collecting exotic equipment, he is concentrating on the particular combination of artistic feeling, talent and luck which goes into capturing good pictures.

"The most important thing to me — and this probably comes after doing it awhile — is to be able to use the raw subject matter to say something that you want to say yourself," he explained.

While growing up in Montreal "where there was hardly anything around", Fitzharris steeped himself in wildlife adventure books at an early age. But he didn't really purchase his first good 35 mm. camera gear until 1970.

He taught vocational high school and grades 5 and 6 in Ontario before moving to Alberta and taking up wildlife photography as a full-time profession.

During his stay in Aberta, he taught photography through the continuing education program at the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology.

Working in slides, which magazine publishers prefer, Fitzharris uses Kodachrome 64 ASA film exclusively and, like you and me, sends it out for developing.

"You might as well leave that to Kodak," he explained, "because they've got all the equipment to assure the temperature and chemicals are kept constant."

Most of his work is done with a 55 mm. macro as well as 200 and 400 mm. telephoto lenses and he uses a tripod most of the time to obtain maximum sharpness of detail.

This approach of concentrating on details within small areas of habitat appears to pay off. His pictures, sometimes accompanied by his own articles, have been published in Nature Canada, Ontario Naturalist, Owl, Western Living, Photo Life, Photo Canada and Canadian Geographic — to name a few.

Asked whether it's a hard field to break into, Fitzharris replied:

"It didn't seem too hard to me. But it's quite competitive . . . there's so many people submitting and photographing natural history — it's an ideal photographic subject.

Fitzharris, who is now teaching a class locally and expects to conduct another clinic early in the new year, said the opportunities are inexhaustable for photographing wildlife with even the simplest equipment.

"There's so many things you can do with a regular 50 mm. lens and an ordinary camera. You could spend your whole lifetime photographing wildlife within the boundaries of that equipment."

Simply by adding a 200 mm. lens and using a blind, a photographer could bag "about 200 of the 425 odd species of birds found around here."

And the subjects are concentrated in the most unlikely places.

Fitzharris found while teaching at SAIT that his pupils expected a quick trip to the nearby Rocky Mountains to photograph large mammals. Instead, he took them out on the prairie.

"In actual fact, the mountains have very little wildlife compared to the prairies," he pointed out.

Pictures of mammals like cougars and grizzlies, he notes, are a "kind of different proposition."

"Those are the kinds of pictures that are quite easy to sell even though from and artistic standpoint they are probably the poorest because of the dull colors and shapes of the beasts (compared, say, to birds)."

Fitzharris came to Victoria for a change in climate, relief from the hectic pace of Calgary and is excited about the photographic potential "around here" because of the great variety of nearby habitats.

He's keeping busy photographing the flora and fauna around Esquimalt Lagoon and has spend "hundreds of hours" combing the seashore with the tenacity and creative touch that makes him a leader in his chosen field.

Lou Brock winner of 'Hutch Award'

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Lou Brock, veteran St. Louis Cardinals outfielder who enjoyed a remarkable comeback in his final season as an active player, is the winner of major league baseball's Hutch Award for 1979.

Brock batted .304 and became the 14th player in major league history to cross the 3,000-hit plateau during the 1979 National League season. He is the all-time stolen base leader in the majors.

Overcoming a form of adversity is one of the criteria which judges, who include major league writers and broadcasters, use in selecting the recipient of the Hutch award.

The award is granted annually in memory of Fred Hutchinson, who was manager of Cincinnati Reds when he died of cancer in 1964. It goes to a player who exemplifies the character and fighting spirit of Hutchinson.

Cougars go a la Spartak

Victoria Cougars — perhaps picking up a few pointers from their 14-3 loss to Moscow Spartak — came up with an efficient attack Tuesday to blast host Calgary Wranglers 8-2 in a battle of the Western Hockey League division leaders.

Cougars, who held a 5-1 lead after the first period and coasted the rest of the way, took only 23 shots on goal.

The Victoria club improved its Western Division leading record to 22-5 with the victory while Calgary had a seven-game winning streak stopped but remained on top of the Eastern Division with a 22-6 record.

Playing before 4,831 fans, the largest crowd of the season at Stampede Corral, Cougars counted two power-play goals and Brad Palmer capped the outburst with a short-handed effort.

Goalie Grant Fuhr was outstanding, making 35 saves to push his league-leading goals-against average to 2.25. Greg Adams and Mark Morrison each had two goals and singles went to Bud McCarthy, Bob Jansch, Randy Zinn and Brad Palmer.

Ray Cote and Kelly Kisio replied for the Wranglers.

The Victoria club continues a 10-game road trip tonight with a game against the Broncos in Lethbridge.

In the only other WHL game, Lorne Bokshowan scored three power-play goals in the first period to lead Saskatoon Blades to a 7-2 win over visiting Great Falls Americans.

Didier to manage Canadians

VANCOUVER (CP) — Former catcher Bob Didier has been named field manager of Vancouver Canadians for the 1980 Pacific Coast League baseball season by the parent Milwaukee Brewers.

Didier played with Atlanta Braves in 1969 when they won the National League's Western Division pennant.

Seniors curling playoff draws 18 Island rinks

By BILL WALKER

The real curlers — well, at least some of the most experienced — take over on the playoff scene at Esquimalt Club this week.

The Vancouver Island Zone I Senior Men's playoff has attracted an entry of 18 rinks, 11 from the South Island and seven from the North, for the double-knock-out tournament.

There are eight rinks from Victoria Club, headed by 1979 Zone rep Dave Johnston and his group of Gordon Hooey, Stan Humphrey and Marvin Heap.

There are two from host Esquimalt, one from Oak Bay, one from Duncan, two from Port Alberni, two from Nanaimo, and one each from Campbell River and Powell River.

Out of this group, four rinks will qualify for the Pacific Coast Curling Association eight-rink playoffs which will be held at Esquimalt, Jan. 25-27.

Following that event the B.C. championship will be held at Esquimalt, Jan. 28-29, with the winner going to the nationals in St. John, N.B., Mar 9-14.

While Johnston must rule as one of the favorites to repeat as a Zone rep, the competition promises to be interesting, if not downright tough for all the places.

For also entered, among others, are such notables as:

Two-time former Brier skip Glen Harper of Duncan, who has reached that magic age;

Tony Gutoski, skip of the 1958 B.C. Brier rink;

Don MacRae, former national seniors champion;

And Gordon Carmichael, former PCCA rep in the B.C. Mixed.

The first draw is Friday at 4 p.m. Other draws are Friday at 9 p.m., Saturday at 8 a.m., 2 and 4 p.m., and Sunday at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

Also on the playoff front, the four South Island representatives for both the Island junior and juvenile men's playoff were determined at Glen Meadows on the weekend.

Rinks skipped by Jeff Irvine, Darren Gray and Barry Moore of Esquimalt and Ross Kitchen of the Racquet Club qualified for the junior playdowns, while Ross McGowan and Bruce Fraser of the Racquet Club, Gary Irvine of Esquimalt and Michael Sarty of Juan de Fuca qualified for the juvenile showdown.

The South Island rinks will meet four North Island rinks in the Island final at Lake Cowichan this weekend.

Title bout ordered

CASABLANCA, Morocco (AP) — The World Boxing Council has ordered Scotland's Jim Watt to defend his world lightweight title against American Howard Davis within two months. Watt has not defended his title against a top contender since winning it last April.

Lukowich rink wins

EDMONTON (CP) — The big pay cheque was great, but Ed Lukowich said it will never quite match the thrill of winning the 1978 Canadian curling title.

"The Brier was a thrill of a lifetime," said Lukowich after winning the World Open Tournament of Champions Bonspiel Tuesday and picking up $20,000. "If you lose a bonspiel there's always another bonspiel you can enter."

Lukowich, who now lives in Calgary along with third Mike Chernoff but still curls with Medicine Hat teammates Dale Johnston and Ron Schindle, beat Vancouver's Bernie Sparks 6-4 to win the $65,000 event.

Sparkes stayed close as the two rinks never gave up more than one point an end, until the 10th.

Down one after Sparkes scored in the ninth, Lukowich broke open the game on his first skip rock by raising a Sparkes guard into the house to take out two of Sparkes' counters while staying in to lie two himself.

Sparkes responded by putting his last rock well into the four-foot circle but Lukowich went between two front guards and tapped back Sparkes' rock for three points and the win.

The Sparkes rink won its way into the final by beating hitherto undefeated Robb King of Edmonton 6-4 in a semi-final, while Lukowich took Stan Lyell of Saskatoon 9-8.

The British Columbia rink will split $8,000, while Lyell and King each receive $4,300.

The victory, coming on the heel's of a $12,000 win in Calgary three weeks ago, puts the Lukowich rink's take this season at about $35,000. Lukowich said that last year his team didn't win a bonspiel.

Playland spiel starts Thursday

Annual Playland men's bonspiel has drawn a limit entry of 64 rinks and play begins Thursday at 5:30 p.m.

Opening draw for all rinks:

Skillings wins 11th

The Harley Davidson series of curling has turned into a benefit for the Steve Skillings rink.

Skillings Tuesday skipped his rink to its 11th straight triumph, a last-rock, 6-5 victory over Brad Clarke at the Racquet Club.

In other games, Tim Horrigan defeated Bob Hawkes 7-4, Al Frame edged Barry Harvey 5-3, Bill Morris defeated Bruce Coulter 10-3 and Barry Moore trimmed Don Matheson 9-3.

Horrigan and Frame are tied for second with 12 points, Matheson, Harvey, Clarke and Morris have 10 points and Moore, Coulter and Hawkes eight.

Fight officials displayed gross malpractice

NEW YORK (AP) — Officials at the Willie Classen-Wilfred Scypion middleweight fight Nov. 23 displayed "gross malpractice of their official duties," a medical adviser to the State Athletic Commission says.

Dr. Mortimer Shapiro, a neurologist at Mount Sinai Hospital, testified at a hearing of the state senate committee on investigations on Classen's death.

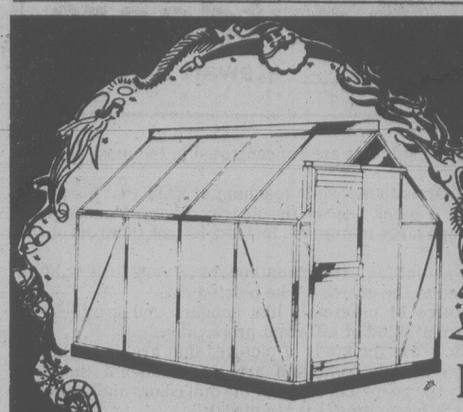

"The officials displayed gross malpractice in terms of their official capacity by not stopping that fight in the ninth round and allowing the man to come out for the 10th round," Shapiro said.

While viewing the final minute of the ninth round on video tape, which showed the Classen, 28, taking three hard right hands to the head. "That's disgusting. The fight should be stopped right there."

After viewing the 10th round, Shapiro noted, "there is no justification for anyone to have allowed the fight to continue. The man was incompetent and unable to defend himself."

Extra-time victory

LONDON (Reuter) — Andy Rowland scored four minutes from the end of extra time to give Third Division Swindon a memorable 4-3 replay win over First Division Arsenal in the quarter-finals of the English Football League cup Tuesday.

Swindon, which beat the London giant in the final 10 years ago, led 2-0 and 3-1 but Arsenal staged a magnificent recovery and pulled level with goals by Liam Brady and Brian Talbot.

The Football Association (FA) Cup holders and European Cup Winners Cup quarter-finalists looked set to force a second replay until Rowland beat goalkeeper Pat Jennings in a goalmouth scramble just before the end.

Third Division Grimsby achieved a notable 1-1 draw in the replay at First Division Wolverhampton Wanderers. Scottish international Andy Gray fired Wolverhampton ahead in the 22nd minute but Gary Liddell equalised in the 71st minute.

The sides must meet again to decide who faces Swindon in the semi-finals.

Docherty attacked on train

STOCKPORT, England (Reuter) — Tommy Docherty, former Scotland soccer manager, was in hospital Monday, the victim of an attack Saturday night by a gang of youths on a London-Manchester train.

Docherty, who now manages Queen's Park Rangers of the English League, needed an operation to repair a damaged muscle in his right leg. He also suffered head injuries.

Police here said a youth had been questioned in connection with the incident but had been released. No charges were being made at Docherty's request, a police spokesman added.

Jocelyn sent down

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Rangers of the National Hockey League have assigned defenceman Jocelyn Guevremont to New Haven Nighthawks of the American Hockey League.

Connors fires five for Braves

Scott Connors boosted his league-leading total with five goals Tuesday night while leading Saanich Braves to a 17-2 decision over Lake Cowichan Baird's Trucking in a South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League game at Pearkes Arena.

Connors now has 36 goals while Saanich extended an unbeaten streak to 21 games.

Ian McLean added four goals for the Braves. Marty Irvine and Bruce Tuck each contributed two tallies.

Brad Giles and Glen Forge counted for Lake Cowichan, which trailed by period scores of 6-0 and 8-2.

Time for entries in Tree tourney

Entries are now being accepted for Canada's only officially-sanctioned Christmas golf tournament.

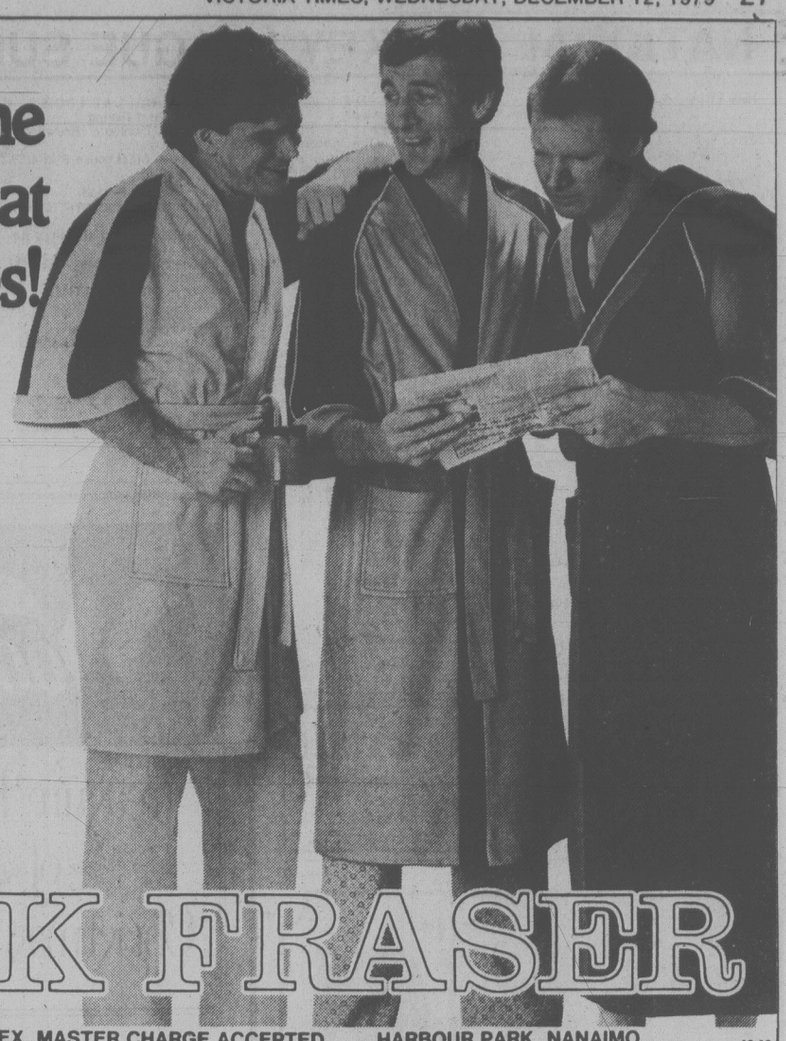

The 21st Christmas Tree tournament, sanctioned by the Victoria District Committee and sponsored by the Colonist, will again be staged at Uplands Golf Club on Boxing Day (Dec. 26).

It is open to anybody over the age of 19 with an accredited RCGA or CLGA handicap.

Launched in 1954, the tournament has bowed to winter elements only three times and once to a labor dispute — the strike at Victoria Press in 1973.

Deadline for entry is Dec. 17. Entries, along with the $15 entry fee, must be forwarded to tournament secretary Leo Derman at Gorge Vale Golf Club.

Ramblers and Bays post easy victories

Mt. Douglas Ramblers and Oak Bay Bays don't appear to have lost much power over the summer and fall.

Both clubs posted one-sided victories as play opened Tuesday in the Greater Victoria High School Girls' Basketball League.

Ramblers, who captured the Vancouver Island title last season and placed sixth in the British Columbia tournament, romped to an 86-40 victory over Esquimalt while Bays, who finished second on the Island last season, bounced Belmont Tomahawks, 70-32.

In the other season opener, Claremont tripped Dunsmuir, 54-40.

Adrienne Mason set the pace for Ramblers, who led 49-21 at the half, with 30 points and Alison Snow added 18. Cory Aspen was the high gun for Esquimalt with 20 points.

Sue Walton sank 28 points to lead the Oak Bay win and Sandy Smith added 18.

Claremont was led by Donna Cory's 16-point effort while Mona McIvor added 14. Kerry Higgenbottom scored 14 for Dunsmuir.

In a boys' exhibition game, Ian Wong fired 18 points to lead Mt. Douglas Rams to a 69-51 win over Spectrum.

Berbick scores TKO in elimination final

HALIFAX (CP) — A relentless body attack by Canadian heavyweight champion Trevor Berbick earned the Halifax boxer a fourth-round technical knockout over African Union title holder Ngozika Ekwelum on Tuesday night.

Berbick, who weighed 214 pounds, stalked his opponent throughout the fight, landing damaging body punches. Ekwelum, four pounds lighter, was unable to direct much of an attack against the Jamaican-born former Olympic boxer.

Referee Herb McMullen stopped the fight when Ekwelum, a native of Lagos, Nigeria, was unable to answer the bell for the fifth round.

The fight was billed as the final elimination bout for a chance at the Commonwealth title, held by John L. Gardner of England.

Before Tuesday's meeting, Ekwelum had been listed as the No. 1 contender for the Commonwealth title, while Berbick was rated No. 2.

Affirmed confirmed as racing's No. 1

LAKE SUCCESS, N.Y. (AP) — Affirmed, most everybody's favorite horse in 1979, has been officially confirmed as No. 1.

The first horse to win $2 million and one that jockey Laffit Pincay Jr. described as "the best I've ever had" received the Eclipse Award for the second straight year Tuesday night as the horse-of-the-year.

"If you had to pick the five greatest horses in history," said Pincay, "he would have to be one of them."

In winning, the four-year-old Harbor View Farm colt became the third repeater since the voting began in 1971. Secretariat won in 1972 and 1973 and Forego won in 1974, 1975 and 1976.

The award was made by more than 250 experts — racing secretaries from Thoroughbred Racing Associations' tracks, members of the National Turf Writers' Association and representatives from the Daily Racing Form.

Affirmed, trained by Laz Barrera and ridden by Pincay Jr., the first jockey to win $8 million in purses in one year, also was voted the outstanding colt, horse or gelding, four-years-old and up. That gave him a career total of five Eclipse Awards. Last year, in addition to being named horse-of-the-year, he was chosen best three-year-old colt or gelding, and in 1977 he was picked as the outstanding two-year-old colt.

"Affirmed was like (baseball Hall of Famer) Joe DiMaggio — he could do anything," said Barrera. "Watching over this horse was like being with a person you love. Seven days a week you worried about him, and it's a relief for me now that he's retired, but I'm going to miss him."

Nine other Eclipse winners were announced Tuesday night: Rockhill Native, best two-year-old colt or gelding; Smart Angle, best two-year-old filly; Spectacular Bid, best three-year-old colt or gelding; Davona Dale, best three-year-old filly; Waya, best filly or mare, four-years-old and up; Bowl Game, best male grass horse; Trillion, best female grass horse; Star de Naskra, best sprinter, and Martie's Anger, best steeplechase horse.

Affirmed finished third and second in his first two starts this year, then won seven in a row, including the Santa Anita Handicap, in the track record time of 1:58 3-5 for 1¼ miles. Among the other races he won were the Charles H. Strub Stakes and the Californian at Hollywood Park and the Woodward and Jockey Club Gold Cup at Belmont.

After his final victory in the Jockey Club Gold Cup, Oct. 6, Affirmed was retired to stud at Spendthrift Farm in Lexington, Ky. His breeding syndication rights were worth $14.4 million.

Affirmed broke the $2 million mark in winning the Hollywood Gold Cup June 24, and finished his career with $2,393,818.

The 1978 Triple Crown champion was out of the money only once in 29 career starts, winning 22, finishing second five times and third once.

Coaches building for Olympics

WINNIPEG (CP) — Coaches Don McCrae of Canada and Yvan Galabov of Bulgaria are trying to build women's basketball teams to represent their countries at the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow.

"The problem of course is trying to make them feel like a team," McCrae said after his squad trimmed a local high school boys' team 72-50 in an exhibition game.

"They play with university teams across Canada and the United States, and generally are the dominant players on their team. Then, in the space of just a few days they have to adjust to playing as a team with players of their own calibre and against some of the best in the world."

They are taking one step along the road to the Olympics today through Saturday at the Winnipeg International Challenge basketball tournament. Other teams involved in the four-day event are from Cuba and the United States.

Galabov said he agrees with McCrae about need to make individuals work as a well-oiled team in a short period of time.

"They are all good players, but we cannot win with just good players," Galabov said. "We are looking for a team unit. It is not so easy in six days."

McCrae said his job is easier because many of the players have played in three major international competitions in the last six months — the world championships, the Pan-American Games and the World University Games.

The system of bringing the women together for major tournaments instead of having a standing national team works best "if we can compete in a major tournament every two or three weeks," he said.

Galabov said his team also is a mixture of veterans and rookies.

"We have six players who are from the last Olympics, but also perhaps five or six who have not much international experience," he said.

Galabov was confident of his team's chances at the tournament, although he had praise for the Canadians.

"The United States gives us not too much trouble and the Cubans are a comfortable team to beat. Canada has improved much in the past three years."

McCrae said his players' chances in the tournament depend on whether they can stay out of trouble.

Canada meets the U.S. — world and university champions — while Bulgaria faces Cuba in opening round today.

Martina takes over from Chris in top berth of tennis rankings

NORWALK, Conn. (AP) — Martina Navratilova of Czechoslovakia and Swedish ace Bjorn Borg have been named the top tennis players for 1979 by Tennis magazine.

Navratilova, 23, toppled Chris Evert Lloyd of the United States from her long-held No. 1 ranking in the women's game. The Czechoslovakian, who defected to the United States four years ago, won Wimbledon for the second year in a row and established a women's tennis single-year earnings record of $524,248. She won six of her 10 meetings with Lloyd this year and was 5-2 over teenage American Tracy Austin, her next closest rival.

Borg, 23, won Wimbledon an unprecedented fourth time and was defeated only three times during the year by other top 10 players — twice by John McEnroe and once by Roscoe Tanner.

It's all downhill for women's ski team

MADONNA DI CAMPIGLIO, Italy (CP) — The Canadian women's Alpine team will ski only downhill races until after the Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y., it was announced Tuesday by the Canadian ski team's program director.

Andrezj Kozbial of Ottawa said the girls, who have been concentrating on downhill training this year, "were reluctant to make this decision, so I made it for them."

"I told them before the giant slalom race at Limone, Italy, last Saturday that if they didn't get results we would concentrate on the downhill. We didn't get results."

The best Canadian showing was by Kathy Kreiner, 22, the 1976 Olympic medallist in the event from Timmins, Ont., who placed 52nd.

"The only exception I will make to this rule will be if the Canadian women have a good result in a downhill race which is combined with a giant slalom or special slalom race and they have a chance at World Cup points or a medal for the combined."

In the first World Cup downhill race last Wednesday at Val d'Isere, France, the Canadian women surprised with three placings in the top 15, including a third-place bronze for Laurie Graham of Inglewood, Ont.

Injuries and bad weather have forced four members of the national women's team to cut short their European tour, the Canadian Ski Association announced Tuesday in Ottawa.

Ontarians Chris Heikkila of Sudbury and Judi Richardson of North Bay returned from Val d'Isere, France, earlier this week after rain cancelled several races.

Heikkila, suffering from a fractured fibula sustained earlier this month, was to undergo a physiotherapy program before returning to competition in January.

Ann Blackburn of Chicoutimi, Que., returned in late November to undergo knee surgery and Dianne Lohedy of Calgary is recuperating from a similar operation.

Kreiner, Loni Klettl of Jaspar, Alta., Marie Dufresne of St. Sauveur, Que., Graham and Martine Lesieur of Trois-Rivieres, Que., will remain in Europe to compete in downhill events.

The Canadian men's team decided two years ago to abandon the slalom disciplines in favor of downhill.

Since then, only members of the technical team have skied in World Cup or Europa Cup slalom events.

The technical team has yet to make any substantial inroads in international ski circles but the Canadian men downhillers now rank with the Austrians as the finest in the world.

Montreal group set to purchase Lancers

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The board chairman of Rochester Lancers of the North American Soccer League says he expects the team to be sold and moved to Montreal for the 1980 season.

"The deal isn't done yet," Charles Schiano said Tuesday. "We still have to have a vote of the owners and the league. But it's close. It's a fact."

Schiano said he expects the franchise to be sold for "somewhat over $2 million" to a Montreal group that includes Molson's Brewery Ltd..

John Luciani, a New York City area real estate developer, who with partner Bernie Rodin owns 31 per cent of the team, is putting the deal together.

Lancers have lost about $2.5 million over 13 seasons, including a $600,000 deficit last season.

Bank of Commerce given theological boot

TORONTO (CP) — Two church leaders demanded Tuesday that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce reveal bank policy on employees who unionize and on the bank's guidelines on loans to South Africa.

At a shareholder's meeting where the bank's robust good health was displayed, the churchmen kicked the institution in the shins by criticizing its approach to human rights questions.

Rev. James Webb of Toronto, a Jesuit priest, said that if the bank is anti-union it is out of step with a Roman Catholic church policy, established at the 2nd Vatican Council in 1965, that says the right to found labor unions is a basic human right.

The Canada Labor Relations Board ruled last week that the bank had discriminated against employees by freezing wages in branches where a union had been certified or had applied for certification.

On the South African question, Rev. Peter Hamel of Toronto, consultant on national affairs for the Anglican Church of Canada, told bank officers that church shareholders want the bank to divulge its guidelines for making international loans.

The bank should declare its position on loans to South Africa and South African industries as three other Canadian banks have done, said Hamel, who is representing shareholdings of the church's governing body, the general synod.

Webb and Hamel are officials of the study group on church and corporate responsibility, which they said represents the major Christian churches in Canada.

Russell E. Harrison, the bank's chief executive officer, said a public statement on corporate responsibility is being prepared. But a bank spokesman said later that this policy may not include guidelines for international loans.

Harrison said the bank's policy on unionization is that "an employee is free to join or not to join a trade union as he or she decides."

"The bank has never intentionally interfered with its employees in making their own decisions as to union representation."

Harrison said the bank is considering appealing the labor board decision and for that reason would not add to a prepared statement on the issue.

Hamel and Webb asked most of the questions at the annual shareholders meetings, which they said was typical. If the churches didn't raise social issues at the meetings nobody would, Webb said in an interview.

"Sometimes you can hear audible opposition to what we say," said Hamel outside the meeting. "I've heard groaning and whistling and sometimes they shout 'get out.'

"It didn't happen today," Hamel added. "Maybe because it has been happening three or four years it is becoming an acceptable practice.

Earlier, the bank reported profits of $201.3 million for the year ended Oct. 31 compared with $193.5 million the previous year.

Fired reporter has last laugh

EDMONTON (UPC) — Radio newsman Fred Griffis, fired from his job at CKST last weekend when he tuned in rival station CHED during a staff Christmas party, has been hired by CHED.

The 23-year-old radio reporter was given the sack by CKST general manager Ron McLeod after he tried to liven up the party by tuning in some dancing music.

He said he tried to tune in CKST but, because of poor reception, turned to CHED.

Three minutes later he was out of a job.

On Tuesday, however, he said he wants to send his former boss a Christmas card for firing him. The CHED job comes with a much larger pay packet.

"I'm quite excited and very pleased. I met with everyone (at CHED) and have high hopes for the job," Griffis said.

But, despite the fortunate twist of fate, Griffis said he's still bitter over how he was fired at CKST and still intends to bring the matter before the Labor Relations Board.

Airline merger waits gov't OK

MONTREAL (CP) — Three regional airlines will merge to form a $200-million operation with 70 aircraft if Ottawa agrees to sell its controlling interest in Nordair to a Quebecair-led consortium, Alfred Hamel, Quebecair president said Tuesday.

Hamel said in an interview that an offer has been made to the federal government to purchase the controlling interest of Nordair from crown-owned Air Canada in a deal that would include not only Nordair and Quebecair but Great Lakes Airways of London, Ont.

He said he had received "a great boost" when Jacques Gagnon, president of the Caisses d'Entraide Economiques of Alma, Que. — part of a consortium competing for control of Nordair — announced he would sell the credit union group's 10.6 per cent of Nordair stock to the Quebecair group if Air Canada would also sell its 84.6 per cent to Hamel.

If Ottawa agrees, a new management company would be created to take 100 per cent control of the three airlines, Hamel said.

The Quebecair consortium also includes the Desjardins Investment Corp., an arm of the Desjardins credit union movement, Great Lakes Air Holdings and the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society Ltd. of Ontario.

Hamel said the merger would not only create a strong financial group but one with extensive airline experience.

The merger of the airlines could result in annual savings of $5 million to $6 million, the Quebecair statement said.

Franco-Canadian relations warmer

PARIS (UPI) — Franco-Canadian relations have entered a new era of even closer co-operation, External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald said at the end of her two-day official visit to France.

"I was very pleased and satisfied to see a very real community of interests and find an identity of views on many international issues," Miss MacDonald said at a news conference Tuesday.

She described her four hours of meetings with French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet as "very open, very, very useful and very warm."

With her French counterpart, Miss MacDondald said she discussed such issues as the situations in Iran and South-East Asia, the European Conference on Security and Cooperation, the North-South dialogue, disarmament and the situation in the Carribean.

Miss MacDonald said the two ministers discussed possibilities of increasing trade between their nations and announced that a group of Canadian officials would come to France in January to discuss concrete projects.

Miss MacDonald said the issue of uranium sales and the safeguards that should be attached to such sales — an old point of disagreement between France and Canada — was "open to discussion."

The issue of Quebec and its upcoming referendum on "sovereignty-association" was not broached in the talks with the French minister, Miss MacDonald said "because France does not want to get involved in the interior affairs of Canada."

Miss MacDonald was scheduled to leave Paris for Brussels today to attend the ministerial meeting of NATO.

Two holdup notes just not enough

EDMONTON (CP) — Helen Jean Lermo, who had to write two holdup notes to rob a city bank, was convicted of robbery in Court of Queen's Bench Tuesday.

Justice J. M. Hope said that although Lermo was unarmed the teller handed over $125 "against her will and under threat of violence." He remanded the 38-year-old Edmonton woman to Jan. 22 for sentencing.

Court was told Lermo, wearing men's clothes, took a taxi to a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada July 21, 1978, and asked the driver to wait.

She passed a holdup note to teller Jutta Wilm, who testified she feigned ignorance by saying she couldn't read the writing and asked the woman to write another note.

Lermo scribbled another note while a bank customer made funny faces at the teller, who was trying to tell him she was being robbed. The would-be robber was stopped at the bank's front door by bank staff.

Oil workers locked out

MONTREAL (CP) — Already-tight supplies of home heating oil in Quebec and the Maritimes could be threatened by as much as a routine equipment failure at one of three Montreal refineries caught in a labor dispute.

Supervisory personnel were working on the production lines Tuesday at east-end refineries owned by Texaco and Petrofina following management decisions to lock out about 700 production and distribution employees, members of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union.

Management also maintained production at Shell's refinery, where the workers, members of the same union, walked out in sympathy with their locked colleagues.

Shell is expected to follow suit with a lockout today.

Texaco spokesman Bob Cameron said Tuesday the company considers the workers on strike and, for safety reasons, will not allow them to return to work "until there is a contract signed, or a return-to-work agreement is worked out."

The workers at the three plants, which supply about 50 per cent of Quebec's heating fuel needs, have staged a series of 24-hour work stoppages to press their contract bargaining position.

The lockouts began after a one-day walkout at Petrofina, the smallest of the three refineries. Petrofina managers decided not to let the workers back into the plant, and said the continuing walkouts were creating safety hazards at the plants. Texaco locked out their workers Tuesday after they walked out in sympathy.

"This is an oil refinery — you can't shut this place down by pushing a button," Texaco spokesman Robert Lafleur said. "We had 90 minutes notice of today's walkout."

He said supervisory personnel would be able to keep up production "providing there are no unforeseen problems."

Union president Bill Butcher said production would definitely be affected as soon as there is any routine breakdown.

Heating oil supplies are already about six per cent below levels for last year at this time. Texaco shut down its east-end Montreal refinery for six weeks early this fall because of import shortages.

Managers at the the Shell plant, the largest in Canada, also shut down a "hydrocracker" unit, which produces furnace, stove and diesel fuel, and there are doubts the unit can be started up again without regular employees.

The plant refines about 120,000 barrel a day, providing about one-third of the province's total production of refined oil products, Butcher said.

Shell spokesman Jacques Viau said earlier that the remaining units could be maintained by supervisory personnel "as long as machinery doesn't break down."

Viau said the 600 Shell workers are to vote Friday on revised salary offers, which boost salary increases in the second year of a two-year pact from 7.5 to 9.5 per cent. First year increases would remain at 8.5 per cent.

He said similar offers had been accepted by Shell employees elsewhere in Canada.

Hibernia well potential black gold mine

CALGARY (UPC) — A second flow test of the Hibernia P-15 well, Canada's great hope for an east-coast offshore oil field, produced more than three times as much crude oil as the first test last summer.

However, the flow rate from the two tests — a total of about 3,400 barrels per day — remained short of 5,000 barrels, the daily rate at which commercial production would probably be viable.

Chevron Standard Ltd., one of five companies involved in the well, 320 kilometers southeast of St. John's, Nfld., said Tuesday the seven-hour test was completed last weekend.

The test, of a six-meter zone at a depth of about 3,850 meters, "flowed at a rate of 2,635 barrels of oil per day of 34.5 degree API gravity oil, with a gas-oil ratio of 890 cubic feet per barrel," Chevron announced.

The first test flowed at 800 barrels per day at a depth of 4,120 meters, for a total so far of 3,435 barrels daily.

"Testing of additional potential hydrocarbon zones above 3,852 meters is planned," Chevron said.

Chevron spokesman Jim McRae said once testing of the Hibernia well was completed, Mobil Oil Canada Ltd., another partner in the venture, planned to sink a step-out well about 3.2 kilometers (two miles) west of the drilling site.

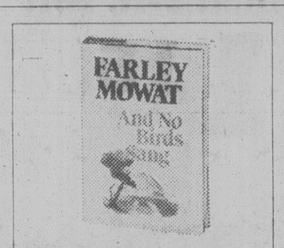

The other partners are Gulf Canada Resources Inc., Petro-Canada Ltd., and Columbia Gas Development of Canada Ltd.

The announcement spurred heavy trading on stock exchanges, especially in Gulf shares. On the Toronto Stock Exchange, trading in Gulf was temporarily halted Tuesday. About 90,000 shares changed hands, and the stock moved up $3.75 to $102.

Gulf Canada was the second most active stock on the American Stock Exchange.

...never was such a goose

... or so said Bob Cratchit. But then he hadn't my grandmother to cook him one. Crisp, golden skin, thick, juicy slices of dark breastmeat, not dried out like Aunt Martha's turkey that made sawdust when she carved it. And the dressing! Savoury with surprising pieces of sweet fruit. I'd eat so much that I was more stuffed at the end of the meal than ever the goose was at the start.

Hudson had strong arms

. . . Mr. Hudson would come to the door, doff his tweed cap, pull back the white muslin cloth from the biggest wicker basket I ever did see and say, "Anything today, mum?" Inside were the greatest array of fresh baking I could ever imagine. Always, Christmas week he'd have the two Melton Mowbray pies my father had ordered special. Once I tried lifting Mr. Hudson's basket and couldn't budget it an inch.

PERSONAL SHOPPING
DECEMBER 12th to 15th.

WE RESERVE THE RIGHT TO LIMIT QUANTITIES.

Before the judge

Judge Harold Alder Tuesday ordered a psychiatrict examination for a 22-year-old Oak Bay man charged with the Nov. 5 holdup at a Brentwood credit union.

Alder said he needed more information following a bail hearing in provincial court for Marcel Victor Poupart of 2065 Goldsmith.

He is charged with armed robbery and using a firearm during a holdup following an incident at the Saanich Peninsula Savings Credit Union, 7103 West Saanich.

A man wielding a .308 Winchester rifle held up two tellers for $6,193 but only got away with $3,000 because his shopping bag broke before he got outside.

Alder remanded Poupart in custody for the evaluation until Friday morning.

Duty legal aid lawyer Barry Mah Ming reserved Poupart's election of trial method until the bail hearing is completed.

Alder imposed a 30-day, intermittent sentence on 20-year-old Richard Byron Barker, 1521 North Dairy, after he changed his pleas to guilty on two counts of common assault.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Barker approached his first victim in the 600-block Yates about 12:20 a.m. Nov. 6 asking him if he had any "dope," or drugs. When the victim replied he didn't, Laughton said, Barker punched him twice in the face.

Barker left the scene for a short while but came back and began chasing his victim. Barker's second victim came to the rescue and was beaten up by Barker, court was told. Barker was caught fleeing the scene.

Mah Ming said Barker did not ask for dope, but was cruising in a car looking for girls when someone mouthed off at him. Barker got out of the vehicle and hit that person, Mah Ming said.

He said Barker was willing to apologize to the victims.

Barker had convictions ranging back to Jan. 31, 1977, for possession of stolen property, trespassing by night, dangerous driving, breaking and entering, theft, and mischief.

Fines totalling $500 were imposed on a 37-year-old Saanich man who pleaded guilty to leaving the scene of an accident and public mischief by reporting that his wife was driving at the time when, in fact, he had been.

Ivan Rudman, 4442 Tindall, was fined $300 for the hit-and-run conviction and another $200 on the public mischief charge.

Court was told Rudman was driving east on Feltham about 12:10 a.m. Nov. 10 when he hit a parked car, causing a total of $5,000 damage. He left the scene and drove to his residence three kilometres away.

Saanich police were called about 25 minutes later and followed a trail to Rudman's home where Rudman said his wife had been driving.

She was taken to the police station for questioning and Rudman went there at 2:30 a.m. and finally admitted being the driver at the time of the accident, Laughton said.

Before imposing the fines, Alder said it was a cowardly, deliberate, and foolish act by Rudman.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: David Victor Smith, 34, of 550 Ledsham, $500; Robert Lawrence Lambert, 34, of 1313 Verdier, $500; Stephen John Lawrence, 23, of 855 Kindersley, $400; Francis Vernon Rask, 52, of 1023 Dunsmuir, $400; and William Murray Cunningham, 54, of 3934 Olympic View, $300.

Yugoslavia's president Josif Tito shot several boars, a stag and a wild sheep during a hunting party he organized for foreign diplomats at his hunting lodge north of Belgrade. Tito, 87, said he finds hunting a good way to relax from increasing worries.

Although Dr. Seuss's story, The Grinch Who Stole Christmas, has become a favorite of both young and old, being a real-life Grinch is no fun. "I say give kids science and give them new math, but don't give them any fantasies about red-nosed reindeer flying around in the sky," said Toronto computer technician Richard Dildy, charged with causing a disturbance after telling Christmas shoppers Santa Claus is a fake. "This is a scientific world we're living in," Dildy, 39, said. "I wasn't causing a disturbance. All I was saying is that people have to stop lying to their children," said Dildy, who is married but has no children.

A St. Paul fundamentalist minister who says he believes rock music is satanic is leading his flock in the destruction of thousands of dollars worth of records, singles and tapes. The Rev. Steve Peters, 26, said $27,000 worth of recorded music were burned in two staged bonfires, and he said requests for performances are growing throughout Minnesota. "We are getting requests to appear in Minneapolis and in other places in the state," he said. "A lot of people who have nothing to do with God are concerned about this."

A Saudi Arabian prince and a Texas billionaire brought together by a love for Arabian stallions teamed up to speculate in silver and have piled up $500 million in profits. The Arab magazine Arab Report said Bunker Hunt of Dallas and Prince Abdullah bin Abdel Aziz got together through the prince's hobby of buying and breeding pure-bred Arabian stallions, a passionate interest shared by the wealthy Texan.

"I was tempted to take it home and play with it in my bath, but I held myself in check," said Forbes magazine scion Robert Forbes — but of course he was joking about the toy battleship he paid a record $21,000 for in an auction at Sotheby Parke Bernet in New York.

Dear Abby:
Last year you devoted an entire column to what and what not to give for Christmas gifts. I thought it was one of the most helpful columns you ever wrote. Please run it again.

Over 80

Dear Over 80:
That column was so well received I've updated it. And here it is:

Dear Readers:
Can you believe it's time to prepare for the holidays again? Well, it is, so do yourselves a favor and do your Christmas shopping early.

If you're wondering what to give Aunt Bessie or Grandpa, who don't get out much, let me tell you what not to give them:

Grandpa doesn't need another necktie, and Aunt Bessie doesn't really want any more brooches, necklaces or bracelets.

With the price of groceries so high, folks who live lone on a fixed income probably would be delighted to receive a basket of goodies. Include small cans of salmon, chicken, ham, tuna, vegetables, fruit, instant coffee, tea bags, crackers, cookies and instant soup mixes.

Older people who live in confined quarters do not need more 'things' that are ornamental only. Don't send music boxes, statuettes, or other bric-a-brac.

Grandparents always appreciate new pictures of their grandchildren.

Another thoughtful gift is lined stationery with envelopes and a generous supply of postage.

If you're tempted to pass along a scarf, purse, wallet or some other useless little doodad you received for Christmas three years ago, please don't. It's a pretty fair bet the recipient will find it just as useless as you did. (Besides, you might get it back the year after next.)

If someone on your gift list is living on a pension, a check for any amount would be much more appreciated than a frivolous little trinket. Or give someone who's counting his pennies a year's subscription to The Times or magazine you know they'll enjoy.

Please, don't even send a gift in a box bearing the name of a store unless you bought it there. Should the recipient want to exchange it, he will be embarrassed, the store clerks will be [illegible], and it won't make you look too good.

Instead of giving someone a gift with permission to 'take it back and exchange it if it's not what you want,' why not save yourself (and them) much time and effort by giving them a gift certificate in the first place?

Holiday time can be very depressing for people who are alone, so if you know someone who might be alone and lonely, give him (or her) the best gift of all — an invitation to spend the holiday with you and your family. The ultimate poverty is loneliness.

Love, Abby

Pudding art dying

By HUMPHRY DAVY

Do you want to attempt to make boiled and steamed puddings — the kinds grandma use to make for Christmas?

If so, take a page from the cookbooks of Virginia Careless of the Provincial Museum's history department.

She has the recipes and knows the techniques on making puddings from the 19th Century.

Careless, a historian, has been researching and testing various types of boiled and steamed puddings made during the hey-dey of the Victorian era.

One of her findings is that the art of making puddings declined rapidly in the past 50 years.

This is evident in checking the various editions of Mrs. Beaton's cookbooks, she said.

"In the 1861 edition there were 80 pages devoted to puddings. There are fewer in the 1893 edition and only 30 pages in the 1920 edition."

While she has been fairly successful in testing the various kinds of puddings, she admits she hasn't yet found the knack of making one from an old recipe.

"The techniques were different then. I haven't given up," she said. "The break through will come sooner or later."

The most expensive pudding to make is the one full of nuts and fruits, she said. But less expensive ones are made from suet and flour and currents. Served with a proper sauce these are delicious.

Puddings seemed to have originated in England — from Cambridge University where a kind called College pudding was made in the 1690s.

But some early poetry indicate the dessert was enjoyed by the English people at a much earlier period.

One anonymous writer wrote:

When good King Arthur ruled this land,
He was a goodly king,
He bought three pecks of barley meal,
To make a bag pudding.

The art of making the dessert reached its height in the last half of the 19th Century. It spread rapidly through the English speaking world.

In Canada it was a favorite with settlers, not only for Christmas but during the winter months.

At a formal Christmas dinner plum pudding was the favorite.

People with large families sometimes started dinner with pudding. This was done with an eye to saving meat which was served later. And puddings are aged.

"There are recipes for this but its seems for the most part the techniques for ageing were oral - that is handed down from family to family," he said.

There are plenty of references to puddings in English literature. They seemed to have made the mouth water of many writers and poets.

For example poet Richard Hughes wrote:

Puddings should be
Full of currants for me:
Boiled in a pail,
Tied in the tail
Of an old bleached shirt:
So hot that they hurt.

Careless can tell you all about the Hughes recipe, and explain some of the cooking utensils used in a Victorian kitchen.

Careless puts kettle on between tries at recreating Victorian pudding recipes — which is no easy task since techniques have changed sharply in 50 years

Fruitcakes shine with honey glaze

questions & answers

Q. What kind of glaze is used on fruitcakes that makes them so shiny?

A. A thin coating of honey or light corn syrup spread over the cake during the last half hour of baking will give a nice gloss to the cake. However, if the cakes are to be aged with liquor, itis best not to glaze or decorate until after aging.

To do this, heat the corn syrup to a full rolling boil, then spread over ripened fruitcakes. Arrange nuts and candied fruits on top if desired.

Q. When roasting a whole chicken in my electric rotisserie, blood starts to drip from the fowl after about 30 to 40 minutes on the spit. There is absolutely no sign of this blood before the chicken goes on the spit and when finished, the only evidence of it is the dark color around the leg meat.

Also, when washing chicken breasts I noticed the bones were extremely red and later when I microwaved the breasts, I noticed the bones turned a purplish-black color. I've tried fresh and frozen chicken, and many different brands. Are companies processing chickens, and parts, differently nowadays?

A. Other readers also have asked about this "bleeding" syndrome in chickens and wondered why the pink color near the bones never disappears.

More often these days, you'll find broiler-fryers are young tender birds in the markets. These are killed and packaged when they are 7 to 9 weeks old. At this stage, their bones have not been completely calcified, resulting in seepage of pigments from the bone marrow to the surface of the bone. During cooking or slow freezing the bone marrow expands and darkens the rather porous leg bones. These red pigments combine with the meat juices and appear like blood while the chicken is roasting in the rotiserie. Even though the pigmentation does not disappear, the chicken is done at the recommended time and is perfectly wholesome.

Q. How long can leftover turkey stuffing be frozen? Should any leftover turkey be boned before freezing? How long will cooked turkey keep in the freezer?

A. If you plan to hold the stuffing or dressing for longer than two to three days remove it from the turkey cavity immediately after serving and freeze it right away If properly packed in airtight containers or moisture-vapor-proof freezer wrap and frozen at zero degrees, the stuffing should keep well for up to one month.

Regarding boning of leftover turkey for freezing, this step is not necessary if the bird has been properly cooked. Boning and removing turkey skin before freezing had been recommended to guard against spoilage due to bacterial contamination that starts along the bones in the body cavity and on the skin. This spoilage is activated if the turkey has not been completely cooked. Another reason for recommending boning leftover turkey was to conserve space in the freezer. Boned or not, leftover turkey will freeze well, if properly packaged, up to three months.

Disease battle needs your support

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

An evidence of the wonders of vaccines is the fact that, since 1949, no one living in the U.S. has had the disease of smallpox.

Since 1971, immunization against smallpox has been stopped in the U.S. because of the total eradication of this dread disease. All of South America, too, [illegible] which once was a scourge of mankind.

The World Health Organization plays an important factor in freeing mankind of smallpox, through its uninterrupted vaccination programs and health education campaigns.

Within the next two years, if the WHO is able to report not one single case of smallpox, it will mean that this infectious disease has been officially wiped out. This remarkable accomplishment can be duplicated in the eradication of all infectious diseases against which our scientists are creating modern-day vaccines.

There is a natural tendency to forget the impact of even one case of polio in a community during the years that polio was rampant. Only those who can recall the panic associated with outbreaks of polio can appreciate the need for the uninterrupted vaccination campaigns against this and other infectious diseases. Doctors who recall the ca[illegible] of measles, mumps, whooping cough, diphtheria, rubella, scarlet fever and tetanus stress the need for persistent pressure by health officials to attain the absolute goal of total vaccination and immunization.

The new vaccine against pneumonia is being enthusiastically received by doctors everywhere. It is hoped that before long the elderly and the infirm, prime targets for pneumonia, will be spared the threat of this devastating illness.

Vaccines against viral diseases are on the horizon. Influenza vaccines have already proved to be significant in reducing morbidity and fatality.

In the scientific battle against infectious diseases, the laity plays a most important role. Without the cooperation of the public, all of the accomplishments on the frontiers of science can be made valueless.

A tiny device has been developed at the St. Vincent's Hospital and Medical Centre in Portland, Ore. Dr. A.W. Diack, Jr. and Dr. W.S. Welborn have designed a micro-computerized machine which can be used for correcting disorders of rhythm of the heart. It is called "Heart Aid" and is being promoted for use on people who are stricken at work or in public places before paramedical help or conventional emergency equipment becomes available.

Think metric gifts now

hilda beastall

When it comes to metric, both the oven temperature in Celsius and metric measurements for ingredients of recipes are likely to be even more familiar to the youngsters than to you. Here's your chance to learn.

And a final plea for your getting the 250 mL measuring cup and the set of five measuring spoons in sizes 25 mL, 15 mL, 5 mL, 2 mL and 1 mL. Someone in the family will give them to you before Christmas if you let your wish become known now.

These two pieces of measuring equipment (costing together about four dollars or a little more) do away with need to convert the new to the old measurements. Simply read metric recipes and use metric measures. No worries.

Keep the old cup and spoons for your old recipes; the new for metric recipes.

Metric or old, recipes for the best of local vegetables will be welcomed at holiday meals if they are given that extra touch to make them into "party fare."

Tthe additions suggested here will be as well received by the many readers who are cooking daily for themselves alone.

Indeed, the extra touches may be continued or expanded for other meals using basic vegetables throughout winter.

During the holiday season, if youngsters are around the home, get them interested in preparation of the vegetables. They may need to be gathered fresh from the garden; taken out of the deep freeze; or from storage as potatoes and other root vegetables.

The peas in the first recipe will be frozen. Green Beans may be substituted. The bacon is from a small random pack of bacon ends.

GREEN PEAS WITH BACON ENDS

15 mL soft margarine
2 mL chopped onion OR
1 mL chopped chives
30 mL diced bacon ends (optional)
500 mL frozen peas
1 mL sugar
200 mL tomato juice OR mixed canned juice

In pan, cook onion or chives in margarine for 2 minutes; add diced bacon and cook until almost crisp. Add tomato juice or mixed vegetable juice; bring to boil. Add frozen peas and sugar. Cover pan closely. Cook over moderate heat for about 10 minutes or until peas are tender. Salt sparingly if at all. Serve at any festive meal.

Frozen (or canned) green beans combine pleasantly with frozen or fresh flowerets of cauliflower. Cook together until barely tender. Drain (keep liquid for another purpose), serve with a little melted soft margarine and grated Cheddar cheese. Delicious.

Canned French green beans will be much freshened in flavor if added to thinly sliced carrots first cooked in soft margarine.

Bring to boiling point with a small amount of bean liquid.

If carrots are too routine to serve as a special at holiday meals, try this next recipe.

SPECIAL CARROTS

500 mL diced carrots
1 mL sugar
25 mL soft margarine
green leaves of lettuce few grains salt
125 mL low fat homemade yogurt
1 egg yolk
5 mL chopped parsley or chives

Wash 4 or 5 green outer leaves of lettuce; lay them still wet in bottom of saucepan. Scrub carrots; dice small (or thin slice) on top of lettuce. Sprinkle with sugar, salt, dot with margarine.

Bring gently to boil, covered tightly to retain steam. Cook only until tender, 5 to 7 minutes, adding spoonful hot water if needed.

Beat egg yolk into yogurt; add to carrots to reheat, but do not boil. Sprinkle with parsley when serving.

This dish is also delicious on its own; could be the second vegetable to serve with the Green Peas (or Green Beans) in previous recipe.

Both these recipes are good served on toasted wholewheat bread for a nutritious meal when cooking for one or two people in a hurry.

Jerusalem Artichokes, prolific in home gardens and seen in some vegetable displays, have distinctive flavor when cooked in skins, well scrubbed, until barely tender. Skins can be peeled off without removing the flesh when tubers are just cooled to handle. Skins are very thin and can be eaten with the tubers, which may be either pink or white according to variety.

According to size, boil either whole or cut, for about 20 minutes, until fork tender. Save liquid for soup, gravy or sauce.

Srinkle with lemon juice. Shake well. Add grated Cheddar cheese on top of each serving. Salt may not then be needed. A dusting of paprika over the cheese adds a rich color note.

SQUASH CASSEROLE

1 L frozen squash OR lightly cooked storage squash
30 mL soft margarine
100 mL walnuts, pecans or sunflower seeds chopped or ground as desired
5 mL brown sugar
2 mL salt
grating of root ginger nut pieces (or ground)
soft margarine

These Artichokes can be added to homemade soups, casseroles, Chinese wok cooking, and raw in salads, adding their nutrition. It seems unnecessary to write recipes for each. Remember to use the cooking liquid as with other vegetables, for many nutrients are in it, also it has a slight jelling effect, or thickener.

Winter storage Squash of several varieties are found now in vegetable display bins or there may be some stored frozen in the home freezer. Any of the orange colored kinds make attractive color notes for holiday meals; some protein is present, abundant vitamins, and also some minerals — all good additions at a time when we tend to forget these necessities.

Thaw frozen squash in well greased large casserole. Add margarine, nuts, sugar, salt and ginger.

Sprinkle with nut pieces (or ground) and a few pieces of soft margarine. Bake in moderate 180 deg.C oven until lightly browned, about 25 minutes.

This dish will go into the same oven heat, even a bit lower than 180 deg.C with other foods being oven cooked. Just give it a little longer to color; the squash is already cooked.

Today's three recipes and additional ideas should be also useful for winter vegetable preparation later, so why not keep the whole column for reference? Christmas may come only once a year, but every day is a vegetable enjoyment day.

Sugar lobby sweetens facts

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Soured by claims that blame sugar for everything from obesity and tooth decay to diabetes and hyperactivity, the sugar industry is fighting back.

The eight major Canadian sugar refineries have mounted a campaign to put across their views, through their Canadian Sugar Institute. They've established a network of nutritionists and home economists who are sending out the message on sugar — "to get the facts straight," says home economist Jane Thompson of Vancouver, the CSI's spokesman in the west.

The material the CSI is disseminating may not change your mind, but it does balance the other arguments we've been hearing about refined sugar's supposed evil effects on body and mind.

For example, most people would say sugar consumption is much lower these days, but figures compiled by Statistics Canada show that it has been remarkably stable over the last 40 years, barring the Second World War when sugar was rationed.

Home consumption is definitely down, says Mrs. Thompson, but commercial use is up. People are eating more convenience foods, snacks and fast foods — which all contain sugar. You may have cut out the extra spoon of sugar in your tea but that drive-in restaurant milkshake puts it back.

"Disappearance figures" — sugar refined and sold by the refineries — show an average of 45 kilograms per capita in Canada. The CSI thinks about 25 to 30 per cent of sugar "disappearance" is due to exports, so the average Canadian is eating about 33 kilograms a year, no more than the average North American, Finn or Swiss and a lot less than most Australians and Israelis consume. Their disappearance is up around 57 to 60 kilograms.

The Canadian figure works out to about 90 grams a day, or 360 calories worth. No one who is fat can blame sugar as the sole culprit.

"The key is moderation and a balanced diet," says Jane Thompson, a Vancouver home economists who is the CSI's spokesman in the west.

What of the claim that honey is better for you? Not necessarily true. Mrs. Thompson notes that teaspoon for teaspoon, honey has almost 30 per cent more calories than sugar. People may use honey because of the flavor, but if they think they're not getting as many calories they're mistaken.

And brown sugar? The brown stuff is just as sweet as granulated white sugar — it's just not been through the same number of filters, and a certain amount of syrup is left on the crystals.

There's even a small amount of sugar in table salt. Household sodium chloride contains almost .04 per cent sugar. Mrs. Thompson says it helps to stabilize the potassium iodide added to salt (that's what "iodized" means) to prevent goitre.

Homemade treats like this are being replaced by junk food

As for sugar's contributions to tooth decay, the CSI notes that in North America there has been an increase in dental caries over the last half century but you can't blame sugar for the rise as consumption has remained stable for more than 40 years.

THOMPSON
. . . industry rep

A Swedish study done in the 1950s found that a large amount of sugar consumed as sticky toffees at frequent intervals during the day caused six times as much tooth decay as the same amount of sugar taken in a lquid form at meals.

If you eat snacks between meals, restrict them to those high in nutrients and low in sugar, such as plain milk, muffins, unsweetened yogurt, crackers, nuts or hot dogs and hamburgers. Highly nutritious but also sweet snacks like puddings and milkshakes, ice cream, raisins and dried fruits should be reserved for meal time, says Mrs. Thompson.

Diabetes? It's a risk if you are fat, but many factors contribute to obesity, and there's no specific evidence directly linking sugar consumption to obesity or diabetes.

Some recipes:

CRANBERRY OPERA FUDGE
Makes 2½ dozen

- 2 cups sugar
- ½ cup milk
- ½ cup light cream
- 1 tablespoon light corn syrup
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 tablespoon butter or margarine
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- ½ cup fresh cranberries, chopped
- ½ cup chopped cooked dried apricots
- ½ cup chopped cooked dried prunes
- 2 eggs
- ¼ cup milk
- ½ cup butter of margarine, melted
- ½ teaspoon almond extract

Stir together biscuit mix, sugar, potato flakes, nuts, seasonings, apricots and prunes.

Lightly beat together eggs, milk, butter, and almond extract; add to nut and fruit mixture, stir until blended.

Spoon into well-greased 1½-quart mold and cover tightly using foil. Pour boiling water into pan.

Cover pan and steam 2 hours and remove mold from pan; uncover and let stand 10 minutes.

Remove pudding from mold.

Pudding may be cooled, and then wrapped in foil and 350 deg. F. oven 20 to 30 minutes.

CHRISTMAS PUNCH
Serves 24, 4-oz. servings

- 1 can (6 oz.) frozen lemon juice concentrate, undiluted
- 1 can (6 oz.) frozen orange juice concentrate, undiluted
- 1 cup sugar
- ¼ cup angostura bitters
- 3 egg whites
- 1 bottle daiquiri cocktail, chilled
- 1 bottle club soda, chilled
- 1 tray ice cubes
- 1 bottle champagne, chilled

In pitcher or bowl, combine frozen concentrated, sugar and bitters.

When juices are thawed, stir until they are well blended and sugar is dissolved.

Refrigerate fruit-juice mixture until it is well chilled — several hours or overnight.

Just before serving, beat egg whites until stiff.

In punch bowl, combine fruit-juice mixture, daiquiri cocktail, and club soda.

With wire whisk or rotary beater, gently beat in egg whites.

Add ice cubes.

Pour champagne into punch at table.

LEMON ANGEL TORTE
Serves 6-8

- 4 eggs, separated
- ½ teaspoon cream of tartar
- 1½ cups sugar
- ¼ teaspoon almond extract
- Grated rind of 1 lemon
- 2 tablespoons lemon juic
- ¼ cup water
- 1 cup heavy cream whipped
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- Cake decorators

Beat egg whites and cream of tartar until soft peaks form.

Add 1 cup of the sugar gradually, beating until stiff peaks are formed and sugar is dissolved.

Add almond extract and spread in a greased 9 or 10-inch pie plate.

Pile mixture toward edges to form a shell.

Bake at 300 deg. F. for 45 minutes and cool.

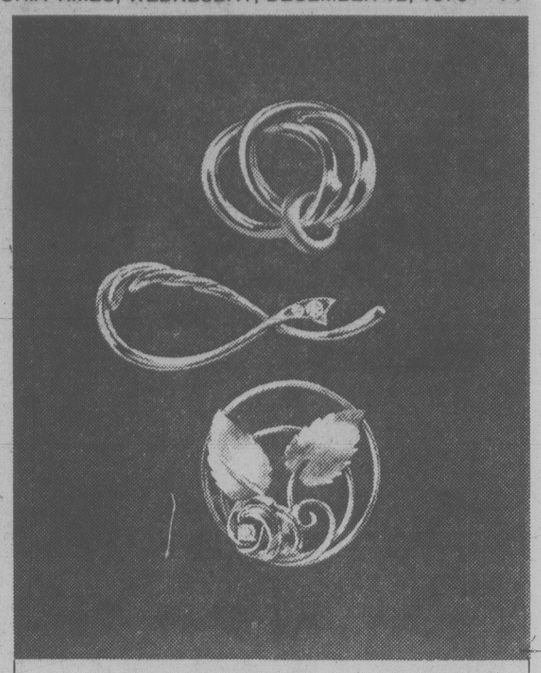

To make filling: beat egg yolks until thick and lemon coloured, gradually beat in remaining ½ cup sugar, grated lemon rind, lemon juice and water. Cook over hot (not boiling) water, stirring constantly until thick and of custard-like consistency, about 5 minutes and cool.

Add vanilla to whipped cream.

Spread half of whipped cream over cooled meringue shell.

Cover with lemon filling and spread remaining whipped cream around edge of pie, sprinkle whipped cream edge with cake decorators. Chill several hours of overnight.

Try rich and creamy cheesecake — with cranberry topping for a change

Consider the cranberry

kay spicer

Christmas and cranberries go together. The festive bird always tastes best with a cheery cranberry sauce or relish.

However, the plump red berries shouldn't be restricted to sauces only. Their rosy glow and exciting flavor add sparkle to delicious desserts. The cold souffle is light and lovely following a hearty holiday meal. The pies are perfect for company and family dinners.

Fresh cranberries should be firm and plump; bright red and free of blemishes. Sort cranberries, discarding any with soft brown spots. Moisture hastens spoilage to store, unwashed but covered, in the refrigerator until ready to use. They will keep for up to 4 weeks.

CRANAPPLE PIE
Makes 1 24-cm pie

Pastry for 24 cm double crust pie:
1 L fresh or frozen cranberries
125 mL orange juice
500 mL sugar
5 mL cinnamon
2 mL cloves
125 mL sugar
50 mL cornstarch
5 mL cinnamon
2 mL salt
1 L Spartan apples, peeled and sliced
125 mL walnuts

Combine cranberries, orange juice, 500 mL sugar, 5 mL cinnamon and cloves. Heat to boiling point, stirring until sugar dissolves. Boil rapidly until berries pop open. Cool slightly. Fit pastry into pie plate. Combine 125 mL sugar, cornstarch, 5 mL cinnamon, salt, apples and walnuts in large mixing bowl. Toss lightly together to coat apples. Pile into pie shell. Spoon cranberry sauce on top. Cut remaining pastry into thin strips to form lattice top crust. Bake in 230°C (450°F) oven 10 minutes; continue baking at 180°C (350°F) 50-60 minutes until apples are tender and pastry is golden brown. Serve warm, topped with ice cream, if desired.

CRANBERRY PEAR PIE
Makes 1 9-inch pie

1 nine-inch unbaked pastry shell, with high fluted edge
3 cups fresh or frozen cranberries
¼ cup water
1¼ cups sugar
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon shredded lemon peel
2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup walnuts
4 medium-size pears

Chill prepared pastry shell. Combine cranberries, water and one cup sugar in medium saucepan; cook, stirring constantly, until sugar dissolves and cranberries start to pop. Mix remaining sugar and cornstarch; sprinkle over boiling cranberries while stirring; boil 1 minute or until thickened. Remove from heat; stir in lemon peel, lemon juice, butter and walnuts. Peel, halve and core pears; slice each half crosswise, keeping slices together. Spread half of cranberry mixture in bottom of pastry shell; arrange pears, keeping them as halves, over cranberries; spoon remaining cranberry mixture over and around pears. Bake in 425°F oven 30 minutes or until pastry is golden and juices bubble up. Cool on wire rack. Serve warm or cold.

CRANBERRY SOUFFLE
Makes 8 servings

2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
2½ cups cranberry juice
1½ cups fresh or frozen cranberries
1 cup granulated sugar
5 egg whites
½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups whipping cream (35%)
2 tablespoons icing sugar

Soften the gelatin in ½ cup of the cranberry juice, about 5 minutes. Wash and pick over the berries. Combine berries with ¾ cup of sugar and remaining cranberry juice in a large saucepan. Bring to boiling; lower heat. Simmer 4 minutes or until sugar is dissolved and cranberry skins have "popped". Remove from heat; stir in softened gelatin. Strain mixture into large bowl. Reserve 16 cranberries; chop remainder. Cool gelatin mixture; chill until syrupy. Beat egg whites and salt in a large bowl with electric mixer until frothy. Add remaining sugar gradually, beating until meringue forms soft peaks. Whip ¾ cup of whipping cream in a small bowl until stiff. Fold the meringue and cream together. Pour the meringue-cream mixture over the thickened cranberry mixture and fold together until no trace of white remains. Fold in chopped berries. Pour into a 6-cup souffle dish with a high collar of wax paper. Chill about 4 hours until firm.

To serve: Whip remaining whipping cream with the icing sugar in a small bowl until stiff. Pipe 16 rosettes on souffle with a pastry bag. Place a cranberry in centre of each.

Here's a quick one:

Cran-Apple Dessert

Heat together cranberry sauce, a few raisins, chunky apple sauce and a pinch of nutmeg. Serve warm or cold with ice cream or cream, if desired.

Cook scallops quickly

the 60-minute gourmet

One of the most delicate and coveted deep-fried foods is coquilles St. Jacques panees a l'Anglaise, that is, scallops breaded and deep fried. The essential factor is speed, to which this column is dedicated. The scallops should be cooked as briefly as possible, just until they lose their "raw" look in the center. If overcooked, they become chewy and tasteless.

The breading technique is simplicity itself. You put flour in one pan, beaten egg in another and fine fresh bread crumbs in a third. You coat the scallops in that order — first in flour, then in an egg wash and finally in bread crumbs. You don't need a great deal of oil (from as little as one cup to twice that, depending on the skillet's size) but it must be piping hot — almost but not quite smoking.

It is best to cook the scallops in two or three batches. Don't crowd them or they will not brown properly. Shake the skillet and stir the scallops when they are added. The total cooking time for each batch is two minutes or less. Each batch should be drained after cooking and must be served quickly. A cold or lukewarm deep-fried scallop is not very palatable.

The classic accompaniment is a tartar sauce. But not, heaven forbid, that dreadful concoction served in some American restaurants consisting of bottled mayonnaise with pickle relish and chopped onions. The greatest tartar sauce is made with fresh mayonnaise, chopped pickles — preferably small imported gherkins — capers and chopped onions.

An excellent side dish is a cold salad of shredded carrots and celery with a light vinaigrette sauce flavored with a touch of ground cumin.

Coquilles St. Jacques Panees a l'Anglaise (Deep-fried breaded scallops)

1½ pints fresh bay scallops
½ cup flour
1 egg
2 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon peanut or vegetable oil
Salt and pepper to taste
2 cups fine, fresh bread crumbs
Peanut or vegetable oil for deep frying.

1. If the source of the scallops is uncertain, rinse in cold and drain.

2. Put flour in a flat, shallow dish.

3. Put the egg in another flat, shallow dish. Beat lightly and add the water, one tablespoon oil, salt and pepper to taste. Blend well.

4. Put the bread crumbs in another flat, shallow dish.

5. Put the scallops in the dish with the flour and toss to coat well.

6. Transfer the coated scallops to the egg dish and toss to coat.

7. Transfer the scallops to the bread crumbs and toss to coat thoroughly. Add the scallops to another dish separating them so they do not touch.

8. Heat oil for deep frying in a skillet. There should be slightly less than an inch of oil. When it is hot but not quite smoking, add about one-third of the scallops. Do not overcrowd. Cook the scallops, shaking the skillet and stirring the scallops so that they brown evenly. Use a slotted or perforated spoon. It will take about two minutes until they are golden brown.

9. Transfer the scallops to paper toweling to drain.

10. Add another batch of scallops and continue cooking until all the scallops are done. Serve hot with tartar sauce (see recipe).

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

Sauce Tartare
1 egg yolk
2 teaspoons imported mustard
2 teaspoons red wine vinegar
1 cup peanut or vegetable oil
Salt and pepper to taste
¼ teaspoon Worchestershire sauce
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
2 tablespoons finely chopped cornichons (imported French sour pickles)
1 tablespoon chopped capers.

1. Put the yolk in a mixing bowl and add the mustare and vinegar.

2. Stir with a wire whisk and gradually add the oil. Beat briskly until all the oil is added.

3. Add salt, pepper, onion, cornichons and capers. Blend well.

Yield: About 1¼ cups.

Carrot and Celery Salad
4 cups grated or shredded carrots, about 1 pound
1 cup finely shredded celery, about ½ pound
¼ cup finely chopped onion
1 teaspoon ground cumin
3 tablespoons white vinegar
6 tablespoons peanut or vegetable oil
1 teaspoon sugar
Salt and pepper to taste
Tabasco sauce to taste.

1. You may grate or shred the carrots and celery by hand, but they will be prepared more quickly if they are shredded using a food processor.

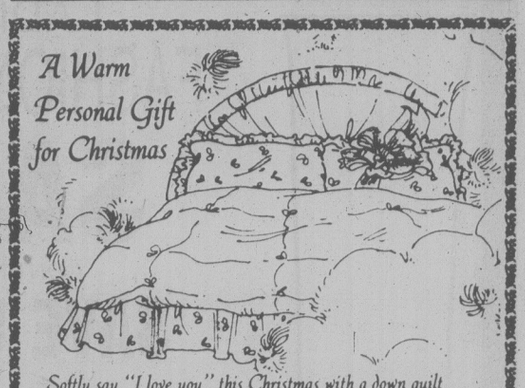

2. Put carrots and celery in a bowl.

3. Add the remaining ingredients and toss to blend.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

My epinards? Oh, that's different your partner's cookbook

By MIKE McGRADY

There is a famous old cartoon; your basic middle-class family seated around the dinner table, the boy snarling at his parents, "I say it's spinach and I say to hell with it!"

We can't be sure what was said to set off this outburst. But I can imagine the well-bred mother saying, "Eat your epinards, dear." Or maybe the boy asked what he was eating and the father said, "That? Oh, that's chicken Florentine." Or eggs Florentine. Or almost-anything-at-all Florentine.

Whenever someone slips the word "Florentine" into a cooking conversation, it's just a slightly pompous way of saying "with spinach." It would have been as accurate to call this "chicken with spinach" — but a dish this good deserves just a touch of pomposity.

Incidentally, if the kid in the cartoon grew up to enjoy cooking, you can be sure he changed his attitude. It doesn't take long for a cook to develop Popeye's respect for spinach — not just for the way it can stand on its own but for its social nature, the way it mixes into almost any surrounding.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: salt, pepper, marjoram, butter, lemon, sherry, rice, flour, sugar.

The Shopping List: Two pounds of boneless chicken breasts; one pound fresh spinach; one bunch fresh rhubarb; on bunch scallions; one can chicken bouillon; one frozen pie crust; one small can Turkish or Greek coffee.

5 p.m.: The last shall come first. Although the rhubarb pie can be made earlier in the day, there's no need to go to that trouble.

Pre-heat oven to 450 degrees. Rinse off the rhubarb stalks and chop them into small chunks. You'll need about four cups of the fruit. Mix the rhubarb pieces with one-and-a-half cups of sugar, the juice of half a lemon and a small fistful of white flour.

For years we've heard women discuss the difficulty of achieving the perfect pie crust. The sad truth is that this concern is well founded. And that is why today we're going to use a frozen pie crust, following the directions on the package.

5:15 p.m.: Spoon your fruit mixture into the pie shell and cover with top crust. Put the pie in the oven.

5:25 p.m.: Lower oven temperature to 350 degrees. Pie should be baked in 40 minutes.

5:30 p.m.: The most difficult part of the meal will be the chicken, so we'll turn to that next. Rinse the chicken breasts under cool water and pat them dry with paper towels.

Put a cup of flour in a mixing bowl, add a dash of salt and pepper, then dust each chicken breast in the flour. Melt half a stick of butter in a large frying pan over medium heat and then add the chicken breasts. Sprinkle marjoram generously over each breast and cook for six or seven minutes on each side. (Danger! An overcooked chicken breast is a tough chicken breast.)

Add a splash of sherry and swirl it around the frying pan. When most of the wine has cooked away, put the chicken breasts in an ovenproof dish.

6 p.m.: Make rice according to box directions, substituting one can of bouillon for an equal amount of water and adding a handful of chopped scallions at the same time as you put in the rice.

6:05 p.m.: Remove pie from oven and replace it with the chicken. Turn the oven down to 250. Okay, the chicken is hot in the oven and the rice is cooking over a very low heat. What now? Now the spinach. One thing you should know about fresh spinach; it's sandy. Rinse each leaf in a container of cool water. And once again.

Chop the spinach and put it in the frying pan you used for the chicken breasts. Over a medium heat cook the spinach in the wine and butter and chicken scrapings left there from your earlier efforts. If the frying pan seems to be drying out, feel free to add another chunk of butter, another splash of wine, or both. In fact, do this even if the pan isn't drying out. The spinach will cook in about five minutes.

6:20 p.m.: Mix the spinach and the pan residues in with the chicken and keep it hot in the oven. It is diffucult to tell whether the juices from the chicken lend flavor to the spinach or whether it's the other way around — either way, it's one of those rare marriages that improves both participants.

6:30 p.m.: Check the rice. Add butter. Remove chicken from oven and squeeze a lemon half over the dish.

After dinner, just before serving the rhubarb pie, sneak back into the kitchen and make some Turkish coffee. Although it is simple to make, it is rare enough to offer a perfect finishing touch to the meal.

To two cups of water add eight teaspoons of the finely pulverized coffee and an equal amount of sugar. Let the coffee come to a boil and pour the froth that forms into demitasse cups. Then put the coffee back on for another quick boil. Fill the small cups with the second supply of froth and serve. (Danger! Do not stir the coffee once it has been poured because what you will have then is not coffee; its name will be mud.)

Future food potential in Maritimes

TRURO, N.S. (CP) — The Atlantic provinces may be famous for lobsters, McIntosh apples and fiddleheads, but they produce only 40 per cent of the food their people eat.

But the four provinces also have the biggest accessible reserve of potential farmland in North America.

This land, 6.5 million acres in all, lies mainly idle in blocks large enough to support commerical farming and close enough to highways and services to make such operations economically feasible, says a New Brunswick agricultural official.

Frank Lutes, president of the Maritime Farmers Council, says 28 per cent of the unused potential farm land in the Atlantic provinces is already cleared while the rest, about 4.7 million acres, is still forested but has the potential for producing food.

Lutes told a Nova Scotia Agriculture Federation banquet that Canada must produce more food. He said the Atlantic provinces import about 60 per cent of their food from other provinces or other countries.

"We are producing only half of our pork and one-quarter of the regional requirement of beef and lamb," he said.

"Apart from potatoes, we are producing less than half the vegetables that could be grown and marketed within the region."

Besides increasing their share of the domestic Atlantic market, farmers in the region could export more products, especially apples, potatoes, blueberries, rutabagas, breeding stock and Christmas trees, he said.

He said the need for food in Canada and the rising world population means new opportunities for food producers.

High interest rates would stifle expansion of existing agriculture and new entry into the field in the short term, Lutes said, but he expected these rates to start dropping in 1980.

Atlantic Canada has a good base of full-time farmers and several thousand part-time farmers, and at least 200 urban residents move to rural areas and start farming each year, he said.

Yule drinking with a dash of thinking

By PAT DUFOUR

In what appears at first to be a government anachronism a pamphlet advocating the use of non-alcoholic drinks is now being given away ... in Victoria area liquor stores.

It has been produced by Health and Welfare Canada in collaboration with the Alcohol and Drug Commission of B.C. and similar commissions in other provinces.

Entitled Great Entertainers, the pamphlet contains recipes for drinks and snacks that have been created by Margo Oliver.

Reading the pamphlet you find the reason for the liquor store-giveaway is not a governmental stab at on-the-spot conversion. Rather, it reminds hosts and hostesses that non-drinkers on their guest lists deserve just as much special attention as imbibers.

Great Entertainers will be in local liquor outlets for the next two weeks.

They offer a wide variety of non-alcoholic drinks, ranging from dry and zippy to sweet and fruity and rich and milky.

Here are some samples:

1 L — 4 cups
500 mL — 2 cups
250 mL — 1 cup
125 mL — ½ cup
50 mL — ¼ cup
1 mL — ¼ teaspoon
2 mL — ½ teaspoon
5 mL — 1 teaspoon
15 mL — 1 tablespoon
25 mL — 1 tablespoon plus 2 teaspoons

The pamphlet omits an equivalent for grams but 454 grams equals 1 pound so this will help you gauge amounts.

There are two recipes for punch, one cold and the other hot. Here they are:-

GOOD LUCK PUNCH

1500 mL cut-up rhubarb
Cold water
750 mL sugar
500 mL water
Juice of 6 lemons
250 mL pineapple juice
750 mL bottle soda water.

Cut rhubarb in 3 CM (slightly over 1 inch) pieces. Add cold water to cover.

Cook until very soft, about 10 minutes. Drain through a sieve lined with several thicknesses of cheese cloth. Discard rhubarb pulp. You should have about 2 L of rhubarb juice.

Combine sugar and 500 mL of water in medium saucepan. Set over heat and stir until sugar is dissolved. Bring to a boil and boil hard 10 minutes. Cool.

Pour rhubarb juice, sugar, syrup, lemon juice and pineapple juice over a chunk of ice in a small punch bowl at serving time. Add soda water. (Makes about 30 servings.

HOT SPICY PUNCH

2 L cold water
50 mL peeled, chopped fresh ginger
8 tea bags
4 sticks cinnamon, broken up
6 whole cloves
2 L boiling water
125 mL sugar
250 mL lemon juice
250 mL orange juice
1 L pineapple juice
1 L cranberry juice cocktail
2 L apple juice
Thick slices of orange
Whole cloves.

Heat 2 L cold water in large kettle. Add ginger, bring to a boil, turn down heat, cover and simmer 15 minutes.

Let stand until cool. Strain, returning liquid to pan and discarding ginger.

Put tea bags, cinnamon and 6 cloves in a bowl. Add 2 L boiling water. Stir. Cover bowl snd let tea steep 10 minutes. Strain into ginger water. Add all remaining ingredients except orange slices and cloves.

Heat well and pour into punch bowl. Stick a clove in the rind of each orange and float on top of punch. This makes about 60 servings.

Tomato Pick-Me-Up sounds as if it could star at a party and also be a booster on the morning after. Here's the recipe.

Combine 250 mL tomato juice, 30 mL lemon juice, 3 mL Worcestershire sauce, 2 mL sugar, dash Tabasco, dash celery salt, dash of salt and grating of fresh pepper and stir to blend. Pour over ice cubes in a large glass. Add a celery stick as a muddler.

You'll still have time to cook the recipe for Cheese Wafers that makes about six dozen. Here's how.

125 mL soft butter or cheese
125 mL process cheese spread
250 mL sifted all-purpose flour
1 mL dry mustard
Dash of cayenne
Dash of nutmeg
Poppy seeds.

Cream butter or margarine and cheese together until fluffy. Blend in flour, mustard, cayenne and nutmeg. Chill mixture until it is firm enough to handle. Shape into a roll about 3 cm in diameter. Wrap in waxed paper and chill very well or freeze.

Heat oven to 200 C (400 Fahrenheit). Have ungreased cookie sheets ready. Slice dough as thin as possible (about 2 mm thick) and put on cookie sheets. Sprinkle with poppy seeds.

Bake 6 to 8 minutes or until edges brown lightly. Cool on racks.

For our final selection we give you Cheddar Dip with Apple Slices.

250 G sharp Cheddar cheese
75 mL light cream
5 mL prepared mustard
Apples.

Grate cheese on fine grater while it is still cold. Let it warm up to room temperature. Add cream and mustard and beat until nearly smooth. Put in small dish.

Cut unpeeled apples into thick slices. Serve cheese mixture as a dip for apple slices. Makes about 300 mL of dip.

Undecided about the Christmas present for musicians in your family? Give a gift certificate from Tempo Trend Studios. When the value of the certificate is $25 or more, Tempo Trend will also include a Christmas present from a great selection of guitar straps, strings, drum sticks, harmonicas or a complimentary music lesson on one of the many instruments taught here.

LITTLE SCREAMER!
That's what people say when they try the IMP. It's a super versatile English small amp, featuring a CELESTION speaker for that crisp English sound.
IT'S GREAT.
24 fret, full 25½" scale, two raunchy pick-ups, one piece mahogany body, lumbo frets that play like glass. The IBANEZ ST-50 ONLY $499 with case.

308 CARDS OF THANKS

Our heartfelt thanks to our relatives, neighbors, friends for their flowers and messages of sympathy in the loss of husband, father and brother. Osgood family.

309 IN MEMORIAM

BIDDLE - In loving memory of Henry, who passed away Dec. 12, 1978.
Words cannott describe the sorrow,
Tearing at our hearts. The void left by your passing, comes,
Then goes, then starts,
We know we really loved you-
And death has shown how much,
We miss your conversation, your smile,
Your voice your touch.
Always remembered by the Sherring Family.

BIDDLE - IN LOVING MEMORY of Father and Grandfather Henry E. Biddle, who passed away Dec. 12, 1978.
No farewells were spoken,
No time to say goodbye,
You were gone before we knew it,
And we will always wonder why?
Our hearts still ache with sadness
And secret tears still flow.
What it meant to lose you no one will ever know.
There is not a day Dear Father that we do not think of you.
Sadly missed and lovingly remembered by daughter Joyce Prior and family.

BIDDLE — In loving memory of my dear husband, Bids, who passed away December 12, 1978.
As I stand and gaze in silence,
My eyes are dimmed with tears.
When I think of all the happiness,
We've shared in younger years.
God made you very special,
With a heart made out of gold.
For when God made you Bids,
He threw away the mold.
It was Gods will to have you,
And so you went away.
But my love for you is in my heart,
And there will always stay.
So sadly missed by your loving wife, Liz.

BIDDLE — In loving memory of my dear father, Henry, who passed away December 12, 1978.
A year ago God took you to his garden in the sky.
I krlow he had a reason,
But still I wonder why.
If only he had given you just another day,
So I could have told you how I loved you,
before you went away.
Oh to touch your hand,
or see your face once more.
To hear you call my name,
or walk in through my door.
But my memories of you Dad, are with me every day.
And the years we shared together,
no one can take away.
Even though I'll always miss you,
And I will sometimes weep.
I know that you are peaceful Dad,
in your eternal sleep.
So missed by your daughter Muriel, son-in-law Ray and grandchildren.

BROWNING — In loving memory of Hubert George Browning, who left us Dec. 12, 1972.
—Sadly missed by his wife and family.

REID — In memory of a dear husband, father and grandfather, Albert (Al) Lennie Reid, who passed away December 12, 1978.
—His loving wife Molly, daughter Pam and grandchildren.

SMITH - In loving memory of James Smith who passed away December 12, 1970.
His smiling way and pleasant face,
Are a pleasure to recall;
He had a kindly word for each,
An died beloved by all.
Some day, we hope to meet him,
Some day, we know not when,
To clasp his hand in the better land,
Never to part again.
Always remembered by wife Jean, children Jim, Diane and Joan, sisters and brother.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS

Those rainy-day toys now soldiers of fortune

TORONTO (CP) — Winston Churchill collected them. So did the Brontes.

They have graced the drawing rooms of Europe's monarchy.

Toy soldiers — those miniature replicas recalling battles and battalions of bygone eras — have held a special place of honor in playrooms throughout history.

Today, the diminutive figures that once were considered child's playthings are capturing the attention of grown men — and fetching hefty prices.

From politicians and policemen to lawyers and laborers, many of the growing ranks of collectors have armies of toy troops numbering in the hundreds. Determined collectors have been known to travel to other countries to seek out individual rarities, paying as much as $2,000 for a single set.

In 1977, a collection belonging to actor Douglas Fairbanks Jr. was sold through Phillips Auction House for an astounding $18,000.

Phillips Ward-Price, the Toronto branch of the international auction house, has devoted two major sales to toy soldiers since January — one netting $12,000, the other $18,000. A third sale before the end of the year will offer more than 200 lots ranging in price from $30 to $1,000.

It's not easy for non-collectors to understand the fascination — even obsession — of toy-soldier buffs. After all, despite their dignified stature and resplendent attire, the soldiers generally stand only five to seven centimetres in height. One must look pretty closely to appreciate the worth of the pieces.

David Tyrer, Phillips' toy-soldier specialist, offers several reasons for the popularity of the hobby, chief of which is the soldiers' scarcity. Of the three leading manufacturers, he notes, only one — the French firm Mignot — is still producing the figures, as it has been doing since 1825.

The Heyde firm of Dresden, Germany, was destroyed during the Second World War and Britain stopped producing lead soldiers in the 1960s to conform to American legislation concerning toxic lead content in paint.

But Tyrer says investment is not the only motivating factor.

"What little boy didn't have a set or two to take him through rainy Saturday afternoons?" he asks, citing nostalgia among older collectors.

"There is also a large contingent whose collections reflect an interest in military history, whose involvement extends to researching appropriate historical eras and assembling full armies.

"There are even some who go to the extreme of staging mock battles on their living-room floors."

The specialist says the most attractive items at auctions are those that have never been taken from their original packing box. Phillips has a grading system for the soldiers, ranging from mint condition (as issued from the factory), through good (slight rubbing, minor scratches or paint loss) to poor (more than 50 per cent paint loss).

But even less than perfect toy soldiers that once cost pennies now are fetching hundreds of dollars. Included in the Fairbanks collection was a Royal Light Infantry 21-piece band that retailed in 1938 for less than $1. It sold in 1977 for $1,600.

Among groups of collectors who meet regularly is the Ontario Model Soldier Society. Founded in the early 1960s by six collectors, it now boasts an active membership of 300.

In addition to a permanent display at Toronto's Casa Loma, the group puts on an annual two-day show and competition, which in 1978 drew the historic castle's largest crowds for the entire year.

A toy-soldier convention is held annually at Chester, Pa., by the Miniature Figure Collectors of America. It's a veritable flea market that attracts collectors from around the world to swap or sell their pieces.

At this function millionaires have been known to write blank cheques toward the purchase of that year's winning display.

LEANING TOWER of Pizza? No, it's a pair of 150-foot cement silos ready to topple on the heels of two other silos in New Westminster. Work crews spent six hours setting seven explosions needed to fell the silos. One huge blast would have done the job but a spokesman said it would have blown out all the windows in the city. Rayonier of Canada wants the land cleared so it can construct a veneer plant.

Try jasmines, they're easy gardening

hilda beastall

Three hardy jasmines are grown outdoors in this coastal area, one the well-known Jasminum nudiflorum coming into bud and bloom now, the second is the fragrant summer flowering J. officinale, the third is J. beesianum, also summer flowering.

Jasmines are easy to care for, and should be even more popular.

The winter blooming plant has six-petalled starry bright yellow flowers spread over a long season since a number of them open whenever a mild spell occurs. The first buds may open before the end of November, the last towards the end of March.

A sunny house wall or wood framework should be chosen for J. nudiflorum. This is not truly a climber for it must have support to be upright in growth. In a suitably protected garden spot, this plant would present a pretty picture if supported to a five-foot height and then allowed to droop naturally as a cascade.

The same jasmine on a low rock wall in sheltered winter sunshine becomes a glowing background for clumps of the big leaved Bergenia cordifolia opening candy pink masses of flowers in winter.

Gardeners sometimes fail to get the desired quantity of bloom on the yellow jasmine simply by not cutting back the flowering growths almost to the main stem as soon as the flowers fade.

This means at any time in late winter as some canes finish opening all buds. We notice that new shoots begin growth almost at once since the time is by then early spring. With sufficient water supplied in our dry summers and a surface mulch each April of either old manure or well-rotted compost the new green canes of this Winter-jasmine reach 18 to 20 inches length and set flower buds for the whole length by September.

A pretty pink species from China, named Jasminum beesianum, is sometimes seen locally scrambling up poles and trees most luxuriantly in summer. Of easy culture needing only cutting back drastically in early spring, this is a useful plant but has no perfume.

The so-called common jasmine, Jasminum officinale, has the typical jasmine fragrance in its white blossoms during summer. These are the same white flowers we see in jasmine tea blends, and in pot pourris, they are also distilled for perfumes.

I find the summer jasmine less easy to grow but know that it succeeds well locally if given the right conditions. It needs a soil well enriched with humus to hold summer moisture. Rotted cow or horse manure or half-rotted compost in the planting hole is a good beginning.

Jasmines should be purchased in containers so that no roots are lost. Planting holes for all jasmines must be deep and wide so that the roots have space to be carefully spread out sideways in all directions into the enriching humusy soil.

Only thus will the roots have the chance to take hold of rich soil to gain nutrients for growth. Let the branching growth of J. officinale spread over a wall trellis or over a wood fence in sun. The root area, as with all climbing plants, should receive shade preferably from other plants.

Pruning of the white jasmine is less drastic than with the other two. Thin the growths a little after flowering just to control growth.

Scrap unification, Canada urged

TORONTO (CP) — The Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies says Canada should scrap unification and re-establish its navy, army and air force along British lines.

In a brief to be presented today to a federal study group on unification, the institute says there is a shortage of manpower in Canada's armed forces, there are no mobilization plans and national security is at an unacceptable level.

In addition, the armed forces are short of, or out of, ammunition, essential equipment and defence stores, the institute says.

It also criticizes in its brief civilian direction of the armed forces.

Return to a three-service structure would permit development of an effective staff system of military managers, while retaining some improvements and common maintenance services that unification has brought.

WINTER ARRIVED in Edmonton this week and the folks weren't in any doubt about it. The first severe snowstorm of the season left roads clogged, including downtown Edmonton where the vehicles above were caught battling the elements.

Rollercoaster price ride for Canadian farmers

OTTAWA (UPC) — Canadian farmers are riding a roller coaster that saw net farm income rise 20 per cent to $3.8 billion in the last year but will likely drag it down 12 per cent to 3.3 billion in 1980, Agriculture Canada reported Monday.

Farmers will actually gross $15.1 billion next year, an 8-per cent increase in cash receipts in a year, the agency said in a release to 500 delegates at the annual Agriculture Outlook conference.

However operating costs will likely climb 15 percent to $12 billion, the delegates were told.

University of Manitoba president Dr. Ralph Campbell told the conference rapidly increasing interest rates, uneasy economic times and inflation have boosted operating costs and will cut into farmers' profits in 1980.

Farmer's "in-pocket-profits" will decline next year in all provinces except Saskatchewan, he told consumer activists, government officials and representatives from food and agriculture industries.

"The basic word to describe the economic future of farming is uncertainty," Campbell said.

The economist urged the federal and provincial governments to stop infighting and begin working to provide the stability that will allow economic expansion.

The two-day conference was told by Agriculture Canada to expect steady or stronger grain prices, relatively low hog prices and higher beef prices next year.

Edmonton houses to cost $146,000?

EDMONTON (CP) — The average price of a three-bedroom bungalow in this city will rise to $146,000 by 1986, the Alberta housing and public works department predicts.

In a report to the Edmonton regional planning commission, the department projected an eight-per-cent annual increase and said rising land prices have made ownership of a detached home a dream.

But the president of the Edmonton Builders' Association said in an interview that the report's projections may be simplified and misleading.

"I hate to see these arbitrary percentage increases," said George Walker, president of the Edmonton branch of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada.

"It tends to make people think housing is skyrocketing out of their reach and they had better jump now or forget about ever buying a house."

He said housing prices can go up by eight per cent a year only if buyers' salaries keep up.

He said housing prices in Edmonton, among the highest in the country, have started to level off.

Anti-nukes get $1,000

WARMAN, Sask. (CP) — A Warman anti-nuclear group will be granted $1,000 to fight the proposed development by Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. of a uranium refinery near Warman, Sask.

The request by the Warman Concerned Citizens Group was turned down twice. But after it was noted that a pro-nuclear group had been granted $1,000 last spring to promote the refinery the municipality agreed to the expenditure.

Celebrants impatient

CALGARY (CP) — With 1980 only three weeks away, some would-be celebrators of Alberta's 75th birthday are getting impatient with the provincial government.

Some municipalities will stage celebrations with per-capita grants, but little can be done, they say, until the province decides how to allot the funds.

New cable service set

REGINA (CP) — Residents of Regina, Saskatoon and Moose Jaw will be able to subscribe to a new closed-circuit television service as of Jan. 1, Tony Selinger, president of Teletheatre, announced.

Teletheatre, owned by a consortium of conventional cable operators, co-operative organizations and the Saskatchewan government, replaces the Co-operative Programming Network, which went into receivership almost a year ago.

'Food has to be No.1'

OTTAWA (CP) — Agriculture and the rest of the food production chain will have top priority if the federal government has to introduce fuel rationing, Agriculture Minister John Wise said Tuesday.

He told the annual agriculture outlook conference he thinks rationing is unlikely.

But food production is vital to the country and the energy needed to grow it would be made available, he said.

Wise said there are many sectors of the economy that would want fuel "but common sense dictates that agriculture and food has to be No. 1."

'Surge' storage likely

By LEO QUIGLEY

For years the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association has called for "surge" grain storage capacity on Canada's west coast.

The PWGA has long reasoned that a large grain storage facility on the west side of the Rocky Mountains would smooth out grain movement, especially in winter when mountain passes become blocked and snowslides and poor weather cause more derailments.

It now appears that supporters of the move may get their wish, but they may not be happy with the announcement when it comes.

Some sources say the Canadian Wheat Board will send formal notification to Transport Minister Don Mazankowski early next year asking permission to spend $100 million of farmers' money on a "surge house" at Prince Rupert, B.C.

Similar action was taken by the Canadian Wheat Board last summer when it set a precedent by announcing it would spend $80 million to buy 2,000 hopper cars for grain movement. It marked the first time the board had purchased capital assets for grain transportation and handling.

PWGA members, believing the board had overstepped its authority, asked for an injunction against the purchase, but a Saskatchewan court turned down the request on the grounds that a deal had already been made with a hopper car manufacturer.

The PWGA agrees with the need for surge capacity at the west coast to prevent having ships wait for grain when the transportation system goes down, but before it agrees to $100 million of its money being spent, it wants to be consulted.

A lawsuit involving the two parties would border on the ridiculous, since the Canadian Wheat Board is financed by farmers and not by the government. It would mean the farmers' money being used to fight about spending of farmers' money.

If they win the battle, the PWGA could end up without a surge house and a large bill. If they win, and the treasury board decides to pay, they end up with two legal bills and a surge house paid for out of federal coffers — to which they have contributed substantially as taxpayers.

Edmontonians turn deaf ear to noise

EDMONTON (CP) — People in Edmonton seem more willing to tolerate noise than do Calgary residents, says Alastair Crerar, chief executive officer of the Environment Council of Alberta.

"In Calgary it's a live issue," he said in an interview. "But there doesn't seem to be any public concern in Edmonton."

Crerar was commenting on a council report on noise pollution just released. The report said while scientific understanding of the hazards of noise pollution has increased, it is still difficult to predict how a community will respond to it.

Crerar said the council, an advisory body to the Alberta environment department, will decide whether to ask for public hearings on noise pollution after getting feedback from the public.

He said the report was highly technical. The council is preparing a less complex version for public consumption.

The report said with the exception of work-place laws and "fragmented" efforts in Canada to develop local noise bylaws, there is no co-ordinated policy to treat noise as a serious environmental concern.

It said Edmonton and Calgary have noise bylaws but their enforcement has been ineffective.

"In Calgary, for example, after an initial burst of enthusiastic enforcement, the pace seems to have slackened, a result of both lack of human resources and policy complaints that the noise bylaw is difficult to enforce."

Canadian nurses lose U.S status

NEW YORK (CP) — Nurses educated and licensed in Canada no longer enjoy special status when applying for visas to work in the United States.

For years, Canada was the only country exempted from U.S. immigration laws that required all other foreign nurses to pass written tests including proficiency in the English language.

Canadian and U.S. nursing organizations are publicizing the new requirement of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service removing the Canadian exemption.

Under the new rule, published in the Federal Register last Aug. 29, all foreign nurses will be required to pass the examination in English before they can obtain an occupational preference visa, known as H-1, to work as registered nurses in the United States.

The nurses also will have to pass state board examinations to obtain licences and in some states there are residency and citizenship requirements.

For French-speaking Quebec registered nurses who are seeking U.S. employment, there is no provision for another language for the screening test. English is mandatory.

The test will be given for nurses in Canada in three cities — Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver — next April 2 by the Philadelphia-based Commission on Graduates of Foreign Nursing Schools. Another test is scheduled next October.

Filing deadline for the April examination has been extended to Jan. 15 from Jan. 2.

Examination applications and guidebooks are available from the commission — 3624 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa., 19104 — and from U.S. embassies and national nurses associations in Canada and other countries.

The new immigration rule followed several years of changes in testing methods used by Canada and the United States to license nurses.

Canadian provinces started writing their own licensing exams in 1970.

"There no longer was a mechanism for equating the exams," said Adele Herwitz, executive director of the commission.

Dr. Helen Mussallem of Ottawa, executive director of the Canadian Nursing Association, said that before 1970, eight provinces were writing the same licensing exams as state boards in the United States.

But in 1968 the U.S. creator of the tests stopped selling them outside the United States.

Disraeli book a novel find

OTTAWA (CP) — Scholars of Queen's University in Kingston, Ont., have uncovered a previously-unknown novel written by the 19th-century British statesman Benjamin Disraeli.

The Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada said the novel, written anonymously by Disraeli and his sister Sarah, came to light in the university's work to compile the definitive collection of Disraeli's letters.

Disreali wrote several novels and essays, but his political skill which led him to become British prime minister in 1868 and again in 1874 marked his writings more as vehicles of opinion than as literary art.

"We first became aware of (the novel's) existence by reference in a letter of Sarah's to a manuscript entitled A Year at Hartlebury, or the Election, and her mention of what turned out to be the pseudonyms for the authors, 'Cherry' and 'Fair Star'," said Prof. John Matthews, senior editor of the project.

Copies of the novel written in 1834 have been found at the University of Illinois and at Oxford University. Scholars say the the story of a borough election is based on Disraeli's experiences in two 1832 elections which he lost.

A statement by the council, which has been financing the project, says that in addition to being a valuable new insight into the man, the novel may hold clues to other Disraeli writings.

The university's project to collect Disraeli's letters began in 1973. Collecting the works, which now number over 10,000 letters, has been made difficult by sales by the Disraeli family which have scattered the correspondence world-wide.

Queen's word OK with CRTC

OTTAWA (CP) — The Queen's televised Christmas message to Canadians is considered Canadian and not foreign content, says the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

A commission spokesman said Tuesday the misunderstanding arose last summer when a lawyer for a CBC-TV affiliate was defending his client against a charge of violating commission rules on Canadian content.

The station itself labelled the Queen's message as foreign but that is not the way the commission classifies it.

Donald Munroe (PC-Esquimalt), who brought the issue to the Commons Thursday, said the commission should be instructed on the role of the Queen in Canada. He referred to erroneous published reports of the lawyer's arguments.

Communications Minister David MacDonald replied he would be surprised if the commission required the Christmas message as foreign broadcasting.

The commission spokesman said any broadcast the Queen made as Queen of Canada is considered Canadian content by the regulatory body.

Population tops 23.5M

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's population on Oct. 1, was an estimated 23,742,000, according to Statistics Canada.

Population figures by province and territory were: Ontario, 8,517,700; Quebec, 6,302,300; British Columbia, 2,587,200; Alberta, 2,030,800; Manitoba, 1,026,400; Saskatchewan, 960,000; Nova Scotia, 848,500; New Brunswick, 703,500; Newfoundland, 577,400; Prince Edward Island, 123,200; Northwest Territories, 43,200; and the Yukon, 21,800.

BARBADOS

Barbados

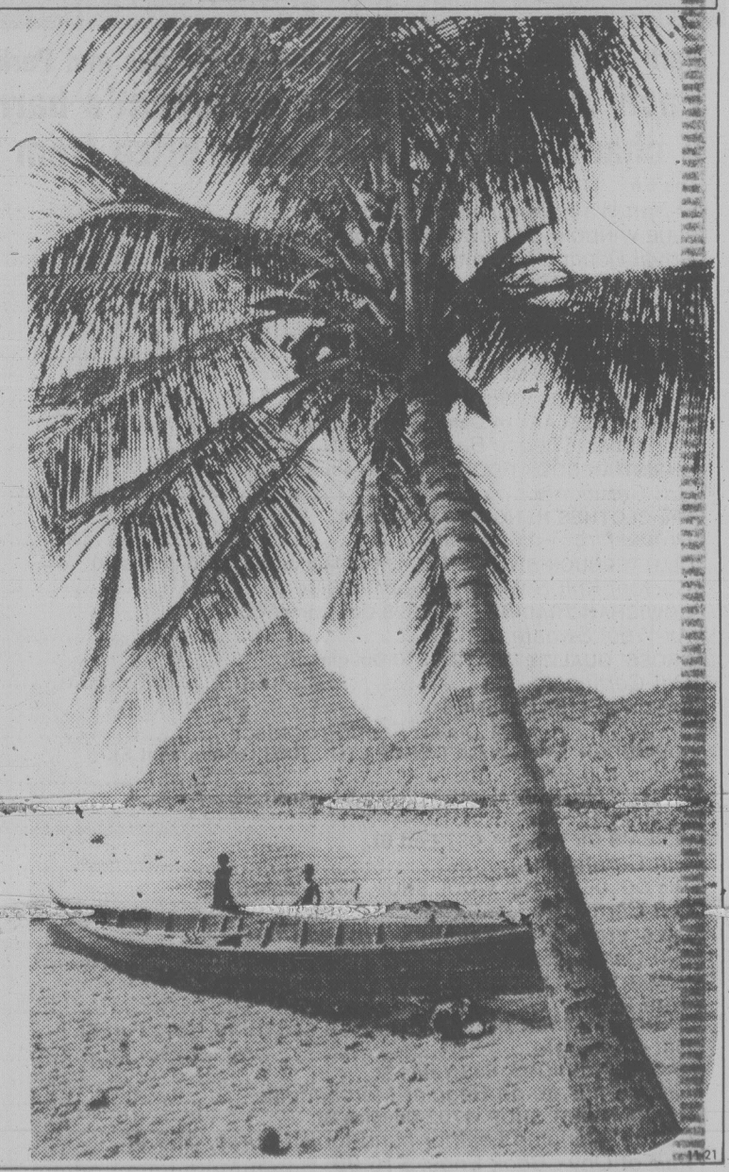

Barbados is beautiful soft beaches, sunny tropical days, a tall cool drink beside the warm blue sea. Barbados is Canada's island in the sun. You can choose the fashionable west coast, home of many sophisticated resorts and calm, placid waters. Or the south coast, where informality is the rule in the many casual, relaxed apartment hotels.

There is lots to explore in Barbados. In Bridgetown's Trafalgar Square, you can see the original Lord Nelson statue, overlooking the "Careenage" with its sailing schooners, and picturesquely uniformed harbour police. At Bathsheba, on the rugged east coast, lie the exhilarating surf-splashed shores of the Atlantic...a great picnic spot. Your Fiesta representative can arrange tours for you that will show you the best of this island paradise.

And nightlife is one of the highlights of Barbadian living...barbecues, steel bands, calypso gr... discos, the exciting limbo dances, and a full range of dining spots.

Fiesta's wide choice of accommodation in Barbados offers everything from efficiency apartment hotels for a relaxed, budget-minded holiday, to deluxe beach front resorts offering everything under the warm Caribbean sun.

Whether you have explored a dozen Caribbean islands, or this is your first experience, you'll find the singular charms of Barbados completely captivating.

Coast to coast trip with wood as fuel

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The woodburner made it — a car that went coast-to-coast using wood as fuel for the first time.

Four Alabama men, resting Tuesday at a suburban motel, said their unusual vehicle made the 2,700-mile trip on the equivalent of "one large Alabama tree." It got about a mile on a pound of wood, they said.

They planned to load the woodburner aboard a truck for the trip back home to Alexander City, Ala.

It took them eight days to drive from Jacksonville, Fla., to Woodland Hills, a Los Angeles suburb.

The car, dubbed the ECAR, was followed along the route by a pickup truck carrying enough fuel for the trip.

Scott said the team planned originally to try to find enough wood for the vehicle along the way, but figured that might take a while. They changed plans so everyone could be home for Christmas. He said they now realize that first goal would have been easy to accomplish.

"We used less than a cord — about the equivalent of one large Alabama tree," he said. "And there was plenty along the way."

The car is a late model Chevrolet with a one-wheel trailer that looks like a rolling boiler attached to the back. About 100 pounds of wood chips are put into the reactor and ignited with a flare. Combustion in the reactor reduces the solid fuel to carbon monoxide and hydrogren and some methane, then gas is sucked into the engine.

San Francisco elects first woman mayor

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Dianne Feinstein, appointed to guide the city after the slaying of George Moscone, turned back a strong conservative challenger to become the first woman elected mayor of San Francisco.

"What this victory means is that the people's voices all over the city are going to be heard," Mrs. Feinstein told a cheering crowd Tuesday night after Supervisor Quentin Kopp conceded he lost the runoff election. Mrs. Feinstein got 102,233 votes to 87,266 for Kopp — a margin of 54 per cent to 46 per cent.

As president of the board of supervisors, Mrs. Feinstein assumed the title of mayor and then was appointed to the post by her colleagues after the Nov. 27, 1978, City Hall slayings of Moscone and Supervisor Harvey Milk.

In winning the election, the 46-year-old doctor's widow finally gained the office she had been unable to win in 1971 and 1975.

"It was indeed a hard-fought contest and now that the contest has drawn to a close, all that matters now is that we serve the city," said Mrs. Feinstein.

Kopp forced the runoff when he collected 40 per cent of the vote to 42 per cent for Mrs. Feinstein in the Nov. 6 general election. Neither gained the majority necessary for victory.

Although the election was non-partisan and both candidates are Democrats, Kopp mounted one of the strongest conservative challenges in recent years.

But Kopp, 51, a lawyer who developed a reputation as a financial hardliner during eight years on the board of supervisors, was unable to convert his attacks of "fiscal irresponsibility" into a solid footing.

Mrs. Feinstein won important support when she got the endorsement of David Scott, an avowed homosexual who came in third in the general election. Authorities estimate 15 per cent of the city's 650,000 residents are homosexual.

As expected, just more than 50 per cent of the city's 372,061 voters cast ballots, one of the worst turnouts in recent times.

The mayor will be inaugurated Jan. 8.

Firms bid on Beaufort drilling

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — Despite a court challenge, controversial bidding methods and the unknowns of drilling in ice-choked waters, the oil industry has offered almost $582 million in immediate cash for rights to explore submerged lands in the U.S. Arctic.

Tuesday's sale of oil and gas leases on 514,000 acres was the first in which a state and the U.S. government jointly asked for bids on offshore leases.

Government geologists estimate the Beaufort lease area off Alaska's north coast may contain 750 million barrels of crude oil and 1.6 trillion cubic feet of natural gas.

The total laid on the table by oilmen — including different bids for the same parcel — came to $2.1 billion.

The top single bid in the sale was $143 million from an equal partnership of Atlantic Richfield Co., Union Oil Co. of California and Exxon Co. U.S.A. Lease winners will be announced within 60 days, although no drilling is expected for several years.

If the courts allow the sale to stand and the apparent high bids are awarded, Alaska will get $567,391,497 in immediate cash, and the federal treasury $14,566,550.

Another $477,161,587 was offered for tracts claimed by both the federal and state governments, an issue now before the U.S. Supreme Court. The top bid involved one of the disputed leases. The bid money will be held in escrow until the high court determines ownership of the tracts.

A federal judge in Washington has scheduled a hearing Jan. 3 on a request by the North Slope Borough to invalidate the federal portion of the sale and by the village of Kaktovik and environmental groups to block the sale entirely.

The borough had asked that tracts seaward of a string of barrier islands be removed from the sale because of severe ice conditions and the possibility that drilling would threaten marine mammals they use for food.

Alaska used this sale to inaugurate a new leasing method called "net profit" on the most promising tracts where no one knows precisely how much oil is there.

Under this method, the state not only asked for a fixed amount of immediate cash and — like the federal government — a share of production, but also a share of the producer's profits after costs and taxes.

There were no offers on eight tracts bid under that system, but on the remaining 18 tracts, the offers averaged 57½ per cent of their net profits, ranging from 2.75 per cent to 93.2 per cent.

Anti-Castro group bombs Soviet office

NEW YORK (AP) — Demolition experts said they hope to get inside the Soviet Union's UN mission today to examine fragments of a powerful bomb that rocked the building and injured two occupants and four city policemen.

"It was a very, very big bomb," Lieut. Charles Luisi, a police bomb expert, said Tuesday night after the blast shattered windows all along East 67th Street between Third and Lexington Avenues.

Meanwhile in Moscow, the Soviet Union registered a strong protest with the U.S. today, accusing local authorities of being unable to protect United Nations diplomats from the acts of "reactionary terrorist organizations."

Responsibility for the bombing was claimed by Omega Seven, an anti-Castro terror group that also claimed responsibility for last Friday's bombing of Cuba's Mission to the United Nations.

An unidentified man claiming to be an Omega Seven member called The Associated Press and said the group set the bomb to protest "Soviet colonialism which threatens our Hispanic-America and the free world." He also denounced the "Communist tyranny" of Cuban President Fidel Castro.

Another man also called The AP and said "Ukrainian nationals" set the bomb at the East 67th Street mission. He hung up quickly.

One neighborhood woman said she was having tea in her sixth-floor apartment diagonally opposite the mission when the blast occurred.

"It sounded like a bomb," she said, asking not to be identified. "We saw a bright white flash."

Mayor Edward Koch entered the mission at 136 E. 67th St. with Donald McHenry, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, and apologized to Soviet Ambassador Oleg Troyanovsky for the blast.

The mayor said two women inside suffered minor injuries and chose to be treated by mission physicians. Four policemen were treated.

Gas export volumes too low, says U.S. firm

WASHINGTON (CP) — The Canadian government's decision to increase gas exports to the U.S. is "very disappointing" and doesn't help plans to pre-build southern parts of the 7,725-kilometre (4,800-mile) Northern natural gas pipeline, its U.S. sponsor warned Tuesday.

The statement from John McMilian, chairman of Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Co., challenges Energy Minister Ray Hnatyshyn's remark that a main purpose in increasing exports was to encourage early building of southern parts of the giant pipeline project.

Hnatyshyn said last Thursday that natural gas exports to the U.S. would be increased by 3.75 trillion cubic feet in the 1980s. half of that amount — 1.8 trillion cubic feet — was going to Pan-Alberta Gas Ltd. of Calgary as an incentive to the Canadian and U.S. sponsors of the Northern natural gas pipeline to proceed with plans for pre-building southern sections for use in shipping Canadian gas south, Hnatyshyn said.

Eventually, the Northern natural gas pipeline will carry gas from Alaska direct to U.S. markets in the lower 48 states. But the northern sections are harder to build because of terrain and climate, and sponsors hoped to have enough surplus Canadian gas to make it worthwhile to go ahead now with southern parts of the line.

McMilian says in a prepared statement that the Canadian government decision is "very disappointing in that it authorized lower volumes that anticipated by project sponsors."

As a result, project sponsors are "still evaluating pre-build plans," he said.

Northwest Alaskan wanted export authorization for about 4.5 trillion cubic feet of Alberta gas, or 380 billion cubic feet a year over a 12-year period, to support pre-building of the over-all delivery system's astern and western legs into the United States.

Instead, the Canadian ruling allows the pipeline sponsors 1.8 trillion cubic feet, providing full volumes for a three-year period ending in 1984 and declining each year after then by 25 per cent a year through 1987.

Oil price hike sought

NEW YORK (AP) — Nigeria, which already is charging almost $3 more than the $23.50-a-barrel price ceiling set by the Organization of Petroleum Countries, is considering raising its price to "at least $30" in January, a well-placed industry source says.

The source said Tuesday that Nigeria indicated during supply negotiations with major international oil companies that it will seek the increase from its current $26.27-a-barrel price when OPEC's oil ministers meet Dec. 17 in Caracas, Venzuela.

OPEC's secretary-general, Rene Ortiz, earlier Tuesday was quoted as saying imposition of a 30-percent price increase at the cartel meeting "is in the order of possibility."

Political violence rages in several Italian cities

ROME (UPI) — Italian police today sought terrorists who kneecapped 10 teachers and students at a Turin business school in a day of violence that included riots in Bologna and the bombing of a press club in Naples.

Italy's three leading trade unions called a nationwide one-hour general protest strike for today in anger over the Turin attack.

In the most serious incident Tuesday, guerrillas of the leftist Front Line terrorist group took over the Turin University Business School, herded 200 people onto the main hall at gunpoint, selected five teachers and five students and shot them all in the legs.

In Bologna, steel-helmeted riot police repeatedly charged groups of students protesting the eviction of occupants of empty apartment buildings.

Four police and two demonstrators were injured in the riots, a car was set ablaze, and police fired tear gas volleys repeatedly. Eight students were arrested and 36 charged with causing a disturbance in the incident.

In Naples, a bomb blasted out the windows of the local press club but there were no reported injuries.

In the occupation of the business school, men and women terrorists calmly walked in, pulled pistols and submachine guns and systematically rounded up people in classrooms, offices and the library.

The Front Line communique said the business school was the spearhead of an establishment move to keep the proletariat down, and expressed sympathy with the Red Brigades, close allies of the Front Line.

The terrorists marched the people to the main hall, made them crouch on their knees with heads pressed to the ground in the position of Moslem prayer, inspected their identiity papers and interrogated them.

As the hostages crouched, a terrorist waved a weapon and said, "This is a Russian-made AK-47. Anyone moves, and there will be a massacre."

Khadafy-Arafat tension mounts

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Many Arab leaders have sought control of the PLO, but the latest takeover bid by Libyan strongman Moammar Khadafy could trigger a small war in the ranks of the Palestinians.

In a series of directives, Libyan authorities in recent weeks have tried to undermine the PLO's role as the "sole representative of the Palestinian people," which Arab nations endorsed at a summit conference in 1974 as part of their unified stand against Israel.

But now Khadafy has publicly denounced Arafat and formed his own "popular committees" to organize the 30,000 Palestinians living in Libya. Several such Palestinian "committees" have occupied Palestine Liberation Organizaton offices in Tripoli, the Libyan capital.

Khadafy runs his country along the same "popular" lines, and it was a student "committee" that organized the burning of the American embassy in Tripoli earlier this month.

When Khadafy expelled the PLO's representative, Abu Tariq, from Tripoli last week, Yasser Arafat's guerrilla group began issuing warnings to Libya. In the past, fighting often followed such statements. "In whose interest are the Libyan authorities instigating a conflict which we ourselves fail to understand?" asked the PLO's WAFA news agency in an editorial.

"It is time for Khadafy to know that the PLO does not derive its legitimacy from opening an office, and will therefore not lose it by his closing of this (PLO) office," the editorial said.

Palestinian officials say the Libyan campaign is a futile effort to subjugate the PLO — something Arafat and his inner clique in the guerrilla group have experienced in the past from Syria, Iraq and Egypt.

The PLO has yet to declare war against Libya, but there is more than one indication that the trend is toward a total PLO-Libyan divorce — a situation that reopens the question of allegiance in Palestinian ranks.

In an interview with the New York Times Tuesday, Khadafy accused Arafat of trying to sell out the Palestinian people and said future Libyan aid will go to Palestinians living in Libya instead of going to the PLO.

Arab diplomatic sources said Khadafy was particularly angry that the PLO tried to mediate the release of American hostages held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

The PLO, an umbrella organization comprising several ideologically different guerrilla groups, has been manipulated by Arab governments since its formation by the late Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser in 1964 to mobilize Palestinians against Israel.

By mid-1970, the Palestine Liberation Army maintained separate, sometimes rival, brigades in Syria, Jordan and Egypt.

Santa in black leather jacket

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) — Jeff "Gorilla" Young may not look like Santa Claus with his leather jacket, chains and motorcycle, and his fellow members of the Ghost Riders Motorcycle Club don't look like elves. But needy children in Port Angeles will have a merrier Christmas because of them.

The bikers visited store owners, requesting donations so that Santa would not have to miss any homes. Their strong-arm appearance may have convinced the proprietors this was one charity they couldn't refuse. They gave more than $350 in cash and scooped dozens of toys from the shelves.

The bikers wanted to deliver the presents to the Salvation Army in their own style. They drove through downtown Port Angeles in a 50-bike motorcade with dumptrucks dangling from the handlebars and stuffed animals hooked on "sissy" bars.

But Dave Munro of the Ghost Riders was pleased with the event. "A lot of people have a tendency not to trust bikers," he said. "We are not the kind of people you would expect to be out collecting toys."

James Goodwin of the Salvation Army liked the toy drive. He said "the bikers were polite and friendly. They don't seem to be at all the hostile persons you hear about — they are just the opposite."

Air time outcry

WASHINGTON (AP) — A clergyman accused of taking part in the killing of 4,000 Jews in the Second World War was given air time on the U.S. government-financed Radio Free Europe, angering Romanian-Americans and triggering demands for the resignation of a White House aide who defended the broadcast.

At issue is an interview last May 1 with Michigan-based Romanian Orthodox Bishop Valerian Trifa, who the U.S. government is trying to deport.

The interview was broadcast even though the U.S. justice department has said Trifa "was part of the fascist, anti-Semitic Iron Guard" in Romania during the Second World War.

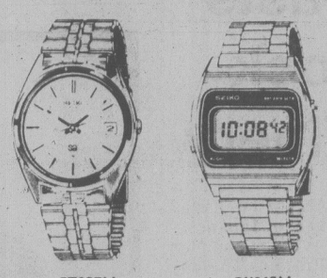

Martin Mendelsohn, a justice department official, said Radio Free Europe must have been aware of Trifa's background when it interviewed him. Now, the justice department is demanding to know why the interview took place.

Caught in the middle is White House aide Paul Henze.

But Rep. Elizabeth Holtzman (Dem. N.Y.) doesn't see it that way.

Last week, in a letter to President Jimmy Carter, she demanded Henze's removal from Henze's staff.

Red carpet for Rhodesia's governor?

What's a name once again?

SALISBURY (Reuter) — The restoration today of British authority over the wayward colony of Rhodesia brings the territory's second official name change in six months — and a third is due early next year.

Until last June, when Abel Muzorewa came to power as the country's first black prime minister, it was called Rhodesia.

Then, with Muzorewa in office, it became Zimbabwe Rhodesia.

Today, with the arrival of Lord Soames to reassert British rule, the territory will technically revert to its original title: the British Dependency of Southern Rhodesia.

After elections planned for the early part of next year, the country will be called Zimbabwe.

SALISBURY (AP) — Lord Soames arrived in Salisbury today to briefly restore British rule over its former African colony after 14 years despite warnings from guerrilla leaders that the move was premature.

Although the son-in-law of the late Sir Winston Churchill came as a caretaker governor to arrange new elections and manage the transition to legal independence as soon as possible, the Zimbabwe Rhodesian government laid on a full program of pomp and ceremony for his arrival.

The 59-year-old former Coldstream Guardsman, stepping off the blue-and-white Royal Air Force VC-10, was greeted by a boisterous rendition of God Save the Queen by a khaki-uniformed police band and a police guard of honor.

Setting foot on the rain-soaked tarmac under grey skys, the governor immediately took charge of Britain's last African colony, which automatically reverted from its new name of Zimbabwe Rhodesia to the pre-rebellion name, Southern Rhodesia.

Security at the airport was light, despite warnings by guerilla leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe that it would be risky for the governor to come here before a formal settlement and cease-fire is signed in London.

Lord Soames, accompanied by his own police and military chiefs of staff, was met by black ex-prime minister Abel Muzorewa, several black and white former Cabinet ministers, and the acting chief justice.

After shaking hands with Muzorewa and other dignitaries, the governor, with his wife and aides, were whisked by motorcade through the suburbs to Government House for symbolic raising of the Union Jack. Hundreds of Muzorewa supporters, mainly women, gathered earlier in drizzling rain along the governor's six-mile route.

It is the first time the British flag has flown here since former prime minister Ian Smith's all-white government unilaterally declared independence from Britain in 1965 to forestall black rule.

In preparation for the governor's arrival, Zimbabwe Rhodesia's first black-majority Parliament met Tuesday and voted to dissolve itself and restore governmental power to Britain.

Although the vote was a formality ratifying agreements reached at the London peace talks, the session stretched late into the night as black and white legislators took advantage of their last opportunity to voice fears and hopes for the future.

The British government decided to send Soames to Salisbury despite a deadlock in the peace talks over organization of a ceasefire in the war between the Patriotic Front guerrillas and Rhodesian government forces.

The conference agreed in principle on a ceasefire last Wednesday, but guerrilla leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe have objected to the proposed grouping of their soldiers at 15 camps encircled by British peacekeeping forces while government forces remain at their regular bases.

Because of the deadlock, both guerrilla leaders and leaders of Britain's opposition Labor party urged that Soames's mission be postponed. But Lord Carrington, the Conservative government's foreign secretary and the chairman of the peace conference, has been determined throughout the talks to push ahead toward a settlement despite guerrilla hesitation.

Some Rhodesian legislators expressed concern about turning all powers over to Britain without assurances the war would end.

"We all look to the British government to justify the trust which is being placed in it," said outgoing Justice Minister Chris Andersen, who ushered the bill through Parliament.

Bishop Abel Muzorewa, the country's first black prime minister, went on radio and television Tuesday night to appeal to his countrymen to throw their "full weight" behind Soames. He also launched his campaign for re-election.

Meanwhile, fighting in the war continued. Rocket, mortar and small-arms fire hammered the eastern town of Umtali three kilometres from the Mozambique border Tuesday night, military officials said. The attack was in retaliation for a raid by the Rhodesian air force on guerrilla bases in Mozambique two days earlier.

Brush fire scorches exclusive Calif. site

LAGUNA BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Flames whipped by erratic winds scorched more than 500 acres of tinder-dry brush and destroyed one expensive home in coastal canyons overnight before firefighters began getting it under control early today.

Two other homes were damaged by the flames, which broke out shortly after 7 p.m. PST Tuesday, and hundreds of residents of the exclusive area abandoned their homes for a short time.

At dawn, a spokesman at the fire control centre said the blaze was 85 per cent contained and 75 per cent of the firemen were being sent home. But he said full control depended "100 per cent on winds which are picking up."

The blaze, which had blackened an estimated 550 acres by 6 a.m., was tentatively blamed on electrical causes.

Some reports said the fire was started by a power transformer that exploded, but the fire control spokesman said that could not be confirmed. He said it also may have started from an arc from power lines.

Some 350 firefighters from Los Angeles, Orange and Riverside Counties were called in to fight the fire in Laguna Beach, a coastal resort community about 60 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

The destroyed home belonged to William Ray, owner of the private Balboa Bay Club, who was seen packing paintings in his automobile as the flames overtook his home. Ray was later hospitaled for smoke inhalation.

Eight minor injuries were reported.

Blasts rock refinery

SAN JUAN (AP) — Explosions rocked a Japanese-owned oil refining complex in Puerto Rico late Tuesday night, destroying one petrochemical plant and badly damaging two others.

Ten persons were injured in the blasts and ensuing fire that caused an estimated $40 million in damage, police said.

Cause of the explosion was unknown, but there were no indications sabotage was involved. Firemen from surrounding towns battled the blaze through the morning and gained control early today.

It was the second major fire in less than a month at the sprawling complex, officials said.

A police spokesman said a blast shook the Caribe Isoprine, a Commonwealth Oil Refining Co. satellite plant that manufactures synthetic rubber, and rapidly spread to the nearby Hector and CPI-2 facilities, which produce synthetic fibres. The oil-refining plant itself was not damaged.

"The Caribe Isoprine, where the explosion took place, was totally destroyed," Ponce Mayor Jose Tormos Vega said.

Vega estimated the damage at more than $40 million.

NATO ministers warn of Soviet power play

BRUSSELS (AP) — Defence ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization warned today that build-up of communist military power and a Soviet bid for greater global influence threaten the security of the West.

NATO foreign and defence ministers also meet today to give final formal approval to plans to base 572 new medium-range American nuclear missiles in Western Europe.

The defence ministers, in a statement issued after their year-end meeting, said the military capabilities of communist Warsaw pact countries remain "well in excess of defensive requirements."

William Mumford, NATO's secretary general for defence planning and policy, told a news conference that the Soviet Union is increasing its defence spending by between four and five per cent a year — 11 to 13 per cent of its gross national product.

The 15 NATO allies have set themselves a goal to increase their defence spending by three per cent a year, an aim not all members are meeting. The goal, extending to 1986, represents "the essential underpinning for the alliance's efforts to improve its defense capabilities," the ministers said.

This is needed, they said, because of growing Soviet military power and to overcome "major weaknesses" in NATO.

"The manpower shortages are becoming very critical," Mumford told reporters, saying NATO members have to compete with the civilian sector for specialized people.

France and Greece did not take part in the defence ministers' meeting but will attend a two-day NATO foreign affairs ministers meeting Thursday. France left NATO's military system in 1968. Greece withdrew after the 1974 Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

The plan, which has stirred considerable controversy in Europe in recent weeks, already has been accepted by key European governments and Canada, and the ministers' approval at NATO's annual winter meeting was considered a formality.

The 464 Tomahawk cruise missiles and 108 Pershing 2s are to be stationed in West Germany, Britain, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands. They will have sufficient range to hit targets in the Soviet Union.

The Carter administration and other advocates of the plan say Western Europe needs the weapons to give it a "flexible response" to the Soviet's new SS-20 nuclear missiles. Opponents contend they will intensify the nuclear arms race and advocate arms-control talks with the Soviet Union instead.

The Soviet Union and its Warsaw pact allies have condemned the NATO plan.

Pilots threaten strike action

FRANKFURT, West Germany (Reuter) — Airline pilots from the United States and Western Europe are threatening strikes to back demands for an extra man on the flight deck in the new generation of airliners.

More than [illegible] pilots and flight engineers from the U.S. and 18 European airlines said in a resolution that [illegible] tion" if the airliners were not adapted to take three crew members instead of two.

"Nobody can force us to fly the aircraft if we do not want to fly them," Captain Fritz Brouwer, chairman of the organizing committee of the European Pilots Association (Europilote), told the gathering.

"The Europilote council already has considered some possible further steps, namely a three-hour warning strike and a 24-hour warning strike," Brouwer said.

Stance on Iran boosts Carter stock sharply

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new Gallup poll shows President Jimmy Carter, in a dramatic turnaround in his political standing, leads Republican Ronald Reagan by a greater margin than Sen. Edward Kennedy, the Washington Post reported today.

The Gallup poll shows Carter leading Reagan, considered the front-runner for the GOP presidential nomination, by 60 per cent to 36 per cent, the newspaper reported.

The poll showed the president ahead of Kennedy by 48 per cent to 40 per cent.

"The magnitude of the changes in the political fortunes of the candidates tested can be seen in the fact that Carter went from a near tie with Reagan in September to a six-point edge in mid-October to a 24-point advantage in the latest survey," the Post quoted the Gallup survey.

Carter's reversal in the poll was attributed to his record in the Iranian hostage crisis and public approval of his performance in office, the poll stated.

The poll showed a major drop in support for Kennedy. In September, the Massachusetts Democrat led Reagan 61 per cent to 33 per cent and was ahead of former president Ford 58 per cent to 38 per cent.

The new poll shows Kennedy ahead of Reagan 49 per cent to 44 per cent and behind Ford 51 per cent to 43 per cent, the newspaper reported. The decline was attributed to a negative reaction to Kennedy's critical statements about the deposed shah of Iran.

Carter trailed Ford during the same period 51 per cent to 42 per cent but now leads his 1976 Republican rival 57 per cent to 39 per cent.

The poll was conducted among registered voters last weekend.

Israel condemned over N-weapons

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The UN General Assembly on Tuesday condemned "any attempt by Israel" to manufacture nuclear weapons and called on all countries to keep Israel from getting the fissionable material and technology for nuclear arms.

The vote on the Israeli issue was 97 to 10 with 38 abstentions. The United States, Israel, six Western European countries, Guatemala and Honduras voted against the resolution.

It asks the UN Security Council "to adopt appropriate measures to ensure the implementation of the relevant resolutions concerning Israeli nuclear armament."

It also calls on Israel to let investigators of the International Atomic Energy Agency inspect its nuclear facilities to prevent diversion of fissionable material from peaceful to military uses.

Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Blum said the mention of an "attempt by Israel" to make nuclear weapons was "based on an empty allegation which has not been proved except perhaps to the satisfaction of Iraq and its allies."

Iraq was a sponsor of the resolution.

"Attention is being diverted from the very real efforts being made by Iraq, Libya and Pakistan to establish a nuclear axis," he said.

UBC prof hearing adjourned

PARIS (AP) — A Paris court today adjourned until Jan. 9 the hearings of a Swiss request for the extradition of Prof. Cyril Belshaw of the University of British Columbia in connection with the death of his wife.

Betty Belshaw's naked body was found in a plastic bag on an Alpine road last March.

Belshaw, an anthropology professor, insisted in court that he was innocent but needed time to gather proof. He said he refused to go to Switzerland voluntarily because he doubted he would get a fair hearing and because, he claimed, he would be unable to confer freely with his lawyer.

Judge Jean Fau then adjourned the hearing and ordered Belsaw held in custody.

Here's a gift of music

The newly formed vocal chamber ensemble of the Victoria Conservatory of Music has a gift of music for the people of Victoria.

Made up of students, senior students and faculty members, the group is presenting a series of half-hour noon concerts entitled The Joy of Christmas to mark the season of Advent.

They began on Nov.30, the first day of Advent, and will take place each Friday until Christmas.

The concerts are presented in the Church of Our Lord at no admission charge, starting at 12:15 p.m. The director is Conservatory vocal department head Catherine Young.

This Friday's program includes two groups of songs by the Dorian Quartet which consists of Christine Wooldridge, soprano; Mary June Pettyfer, contralto; Roland Renton, tenor, and David Wooldridge, bass. They will sing In Natali Domini by Praetorius; In Dulci Jubilo by Pearsall; a 16th century carol, Rejoice in the Lord Alway; Dixit Maria by Hassler, and Psallite by Praetorius.

Guest soprano Gaille Harris of Calgary, who is spending a year studying in Victoria, will sing Magnificat by Thompson accompanied at the piano by Teresa Cheng, and the Dorian Quartet will be joined by soprano Aurora Hamel of Kelowna and Susan Thorn at the organ in Gloria Patri by Handel.

On the following Friday, Dec.21, soprano Adele Lewis will sing a group of traditional Spanish carols arranged by Joaquin Nin.

A group of Christmas songs including Sleep, Sweet Jesus, Sleep, Johnny Bring the Pine Tree In and Behold a Star will be sung by Roland Renton. Both soloists will be accompanied by pianist Barbara Griffith Blower.

Completing this final program in the series, the Dorian Quartet will sing familiar English and German carols — O Christmas Tree, The First Nowell, O Come All Ye Faithful and Silent Night.

Concert by Trio Friday

Trio Victoria will present the third in this season's series of concerts Friday night at 8 in Craigdarroch Castle.

The Trio, consisting of Robin Wood, piano, Sydney Humphreys, violin, and James Hunter, cello, will perform Mozart's Piano Trio in C Major K. 548, and Smetana's Piano Trio in G minor, Op. 15.

The third number on the program will be the Beethoven Sonata for Violin and Piano, Op. 30 No. 2.

General admission is $2.50, students and senior citizens $1.

Victoria pair get chance on TV

TORONTO (CP) — Eighteen Canadian performers, including two from the Victoria area, will receive a $2,000 cash bursary and an appearance on one of three prime time network television shows next spring after being chosen in the recent du Maurier Search for Stars talent competition.

A competition spokesman said a panel of judges travelled to eight cities during October and November and held auditions with more than 800 performers representing both the classical and contemporary arts.

Percy's ratings go Nielsen one better

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Roger Percy has developed a television ratings operation that goes far beyond Nielsen. It records not only how many people watched a program, which is as far as Nielsen carries the matter, but viewer attitudes, as well.

A top-rated Nielsen program, for example, has earned that status because more people had their sets tuned into that show than to other shows. Nielsen ratings do not say whether viewers thought the thing was a piece of junk, or whether viewers were even paying attention.

Percy's system, developed at the Stanford Research Centre, can do what Nielsen does, plus more. It works this way:

About 200 homes in the Seattle area are equipped with the R.D. Percy Co.'s VoxBox, which automatically records what program viewers are watching, much the way the Nielsen metres do. But the VoxBox is equipped with 10 buttons, which carry such labels as, Excellent, Informative, Credible, Funny, Unbelievable, Dumb and Zap.

The VoxBox viewer is asked to register his feelings about whatever appears on his set whenever he feels like doing it. He may punch one button a week or one a minute, during a commercial or during a regular program.

The information is fed to the Percy Co.'s computers, where it is compiled and deciphered.

While working for the advertising firm of McCann-Erickson, one of TV's largest ad suppliers, Percy wanted to devise a system of determining a commercial's wear-out point. Deciding when a commercial had lost its effect — in advertising terms, when an ad needed to be zapped out — was merely an expensive matter of guesswork.

Percy hired the Stanford Research Institute to devise a system that would accurately measure viewers' response to television commercials. What was hoped for was a system as natural, or "clean," as possible; not, in other words, just a grading system.

The Stanford folks came up with the VoxBox, which monitors programs as well as commercials with the idea that people would not be prejudiced if they were not told they were supposed to be testing commercials.

The networks are understandably reluctant to adopt a qualitative ratings system such as Percy's. The Nielsen system has served networks well because networks simply sell viewers to advertisers — it does not matter whether the viewers are "good" viewers or not.

Chappaquiddick too hot for major studios to handle

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Presidential aspirant Ted Kennedy cannot be enthusiastic about Chappaquiddick, a movie based on Mary Jo Kopechne's death while a passenger in the Massachusetts senator's car in 1969.

At least, Kennedy has refused to see or talk to actor Jack Knight who will portray the senator in the film which traces the events of that fateful July party, the car ride and Kennedy's subsequent behavior.

As might be expected, Chappaquiddick will be an independent film. The subject matter is too hot for a major studio to handle.

All The President's Men, the Watergate hot potato movie, was produced by Robert Redford and Warner Bros. At the time it was produced Richard Nixon was past history, in no position for reprisals.

That Ted Kennedy may become President of the United States is a clear and present possibility. Ergo, no studio is anxious to court the disfavor of a man who may one day be in a powerful position to seek retribution.

Producer of Chappaquiddick is Glenn Stensel, an actor around Hollywood who tried to produce Peanuts starring Billy Carter. It never got off the ground.

Knight, a long-time friend of Stensel, said Stensel has a financial partner and a budget of something under $1 million to produce Chappaquiddick. Knight also said there is no Republican or Carter money behind the project.

Knight is better known in Hollywood than Stensel. He has appeared in episodic TV (Charlie's Angels, The Rockford Files), does some minor emcee work and bills himself as actor-entertainer-athlete and family man.

A husky, self-assured man of about 40, Knight is a Kennedy groupie. He was devoted to JFK and RFK and says he will vote for Ted Kennedy for President if the senator wins the nomination.

The actress originally cast in the Mary Jo Kopechne role quit the project and has not yet been replaced.

According to Knight, the script covers the 24 hours of Kennedy's behavior on the night of Kopechne's death and the inquest six months later.

Knight flew to Washington last month in hopes of seeing Kennedy or at least some people close to the Massachusetts senator. He was twice given the brushoff at Kennedy campaign headquarters. They said Teddy was on the campaign trail.

"Finally I got to see Tom Southwick, Teddy's press aide," Knight said. "My reception was polite but icy. All he wanted to know was who was producing the movie and where the money was coming from.

"To my knowledge no attempts have been made to stop the film. And I haven't heard any rumors about any other political interests backing the picture."

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

Blackwood is one of the best conventions ever devised, but it should not be abused or it may defeat its very purpose. There are several delicate nuances connected with Blackwood that must be appreciated for the convention to be fully effective. Here is a case that shows how too rigid an application of Blackwood does more harm than good.

Let's say North responds two clubs to the opening spade bid and that South goes directly to four spades. Right at this point North has the values necessary for a raise to six spades — considering South's leap to four. But, in order to test the possibility of a grand slam, North should first use Blackwood.

He does not do so to learn whether South has an ace — that is practically a sure thing — but because he plans later to bid or suggest a grand slam.

South's response shows one ace and North then bids five notrump, ostensibly asking for kings. This bid, by logic as well as universal agreement, guarantees that the partnership has all four aces.

Actually, South should bid seven spades at this stage. He should not woodenly respond six hearts to show two kings. He should pay more attention to how many tricks he's apt to make than to telling partner how many kings he has.

From the standpoint of tricks, South can count seven spade winners, at least three clubs and the two red aces, and he should have no doubt whatsoever that North will provide a thirteenth trick — beyond his three aces — in one form or another. South should therefore bid the grand slam forthwith. But even if South responds six hearts, he should then go to seven spades over North's six spade bid.

SOLUTIONS THURSDAY

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, December 13, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Defer to wishes of those close to you, including partner or mate. Accent on special agreements, legal documents, ability to play waiting game. Pisces, Virgo person figure in scenario. You get behind scenes glimpse of organization in process of being revamped.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You climb higher on totem pole; you'll have more responsibility and greater chance for success. Co-worker could become a valuable ally. Older individual supports your efforts. Money dilemma is due to be resolved. Cancer, Capricorn persons figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Reach beyond current expectations—you could grasp brass ring. Long-standing project can be completed. Tie loose ends, be willing to let go of "security blanket." Get rid of burden not rightly your own. Stop being a human "crying towel."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make new starts in new directions. Highlight greater independence of thought and action. Welcome new contacts, deal with Leo, Aquarius persons. You'll receive appealing offer for property, other possessions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give full play to intuitive intellect—follow through on hunch. You learn by teaching; member of opposite sex who once professed love makes reappearance. Relative discusses recent journey. Cancer, Capricorn, Aquarius persons figure prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Elements of timing, luck come into sharp, clear focus. Ride with tide, expand horizons. Gemini, Sagittarius natives play key roles. Be flexible, but do not lose sight of ultimate goal. Your weight commands more than usual attention.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your position is solid—circumstances favor your endeavors. Judgment, intuition synchronize to your advantage. Personality is highlighted; many claim you have developed "charisma." You succeed by making personal appearances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Communication received from one confined to home or hospital. Be receptive. Scenario features change, travel, variety. Member of opposite sex desires special relationship. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons play significant roles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Surprise gift is on agenda; you have chance to beautify surroundings. Major domestic adjustment is highlighted. Pleasure principle is emphasized. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently. What seemed out-of-reach is closer than you might think.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): See places, people as they are, not merely as you wish they might exist. Be realistic enough to avoid self-deception. Secret meeting could be on agenda. Be discreet, don't tell all you know. Pisces, Virgo persons figure in unusual scenario.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Communications gap is closed. You get desired results by accepting added responsibility. Capricorn, Cancer persons figure prominently. Success indicated in areas dealing with advertising, publishing, educational aids. Plan ahead for travel.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look beneath surface indications—you are due to make profitable discovery. Added recognition comes as result of better distribution, display. You could be in midst of negotiating a more favorable contract. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently.

IF DECEMBER 13 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have special ability to speak truth in manner that does not offend others. You are unorthodox, aggressive, a fighter for rights of people not capable of defending themselves. You are fascinated with law, drama and medicine. You are an original thinker, were on your own at a relatively early age, and could have been separated from one or both parents.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

Sean was looking at the photos on the window ledge. "A handsome couple," he said. "How old were you and Mary when you married?"

"It's odd that you ask, for I've been figuring out something on our ages," Terry replied. "I'm now thirty-five, exactly ... difference between the squares of our ages when we married. And it's quite a coincidence that it's also the difference between the squares of the ages of our two kids. Figure it out yourself."

You try!

Police foil IRA bomb blitz

LONDON (AP) — British detectives said they foiled a planned Christmas bomb blitz in Britain by the Irish Republican Army with the arrest today of 24 suspected IRA activists in dawn raids here and in other cities.

Some detectives said they believe they smashed a new "active service unit" of the outlawed IRA's Provisional wing and captured the cell's leader with five top deputies.

Scotland Yard officials declined comment, but confirmed that 15 of the arrests, including three women, were made in London. Nine other persons were rounded up in co-ordinated swoops in Birmingham, Liverpool and Southampton, cities where the guerrillas are known to have underground cells.

Detectives also seized rifles, handguns and bomb-making equipment in the London raids. There were unconfirmed reports they found explosives.

Cmdr. Peter Duffy, head of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist squad, said the swoops followed three months of surveillance and was "a pre-emptive strike" to foil an IRA bombing campaign in Britain.

The almost exclusively Roman Catholic IRA is fighting to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland and reunite the province with the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic Irish republic to the south.

The Provisionals have been rebuilding their network in British cities after police smashed their units in Britain two years ago.

The IRA in the past has used Southampton, a major city in southern England, as a key port for smuggling explosives and weapons into the mainland. Liverpool and Birmingham have been important bases for the terrorist bombers.

Korea returns soldier's body

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — North Korea today returned to U.S. officials the body of a missing American soldier who was leading a patrol that strayed into the communist side of the demilitarized zone and triggered an explosion.

Sources in Seoul said the soldier, tentatively identified as Sgt. Thomas Anderson, 36, probably stepped on a mine last Friday.

A dispatch by the official North Korean Central News Agency monitored in Tokyo called the incident "grave," but said North Korea decided to return the body as a humanitarian gesture because the United Nations Command had admitted the intrusion and apologized for it.

The North Koreans refused, however, to return weapons and equipment the Americans left behind.

The command asked North Korea early Saturday to search the area where the explosion occurred after it learned Anderson was missing.

The North Koreans notified the command Tuesday night that they had recovered the body of a soldier believed to be Anderson. The body was returned today in this truce village.

Chlorine released in fire

BALTIMORE (AP) — Sixteen firemen and two civilians were injured in a four-alarm blaze at a chemical warehouse that released clouds of chlorine gas fumes into the air, authorities said today.

Officials said the fire, which began Tuesday night at the warehouse in an industrial park outside the city limits, was still burning early today.

Charles Mooney, deputy chief of the Baltimore County fire department, said the fumes did not pose any immediate danger to residents in the area.

"It's bad down there," Mooney said at the scene. "The men are rotating on shifts of ten, fifteen minutes." Early today, he said the fire was confined to the basement of the warehouse, where most of the chlorine was stored.

He said the injuries were a result of the fumes and the injured were taken to University Hospital's shock trauma unit. A hospital spokesman said the men suffered mostly from smoke inhalation and all but one were treated and released.

"They complained of eye and skin irritations," Mooney said. "It was the chlorine. We don't know what caused (the injuries) as the men had positive pressure masks on . . . which should have kept (chlorine fumes) out."

"There's chlorine, foam rubber, polyurethane, fiberglass, you name it, in there," he said.

Godfather arrested in Sicily

PALERMO, Sicily (UPI) — Police arrested the real Don Corleone Tuesday, two years after he was charged with the murder of a policeman.

Police said Leoluca Bagarella, the suspected boss of the Corleone Mafia family, was recognized by two policemen and arrested as he was getting to his car.

They said Bagarella, sought for a number of crimes, was also wanted as the leader of the Mafia clan in the western Sicilian town of Corleone, the name that author Mario Puzo gave to his fictional Mafia boss in the Godfather.

Officers said Bagarella, 36, and his Corleone gang were involved in Sicilian drug and protection rackets.

He had also been sought [illegible] of policeman Giuseppe Russo.

Worker prepares cheese for storage

It's been a rough year for Parmesan

By DENNIS REDMONT

PARMA, Italy (AP) — It's been a rough season for Parmesan cheese makers. Competitors are marketing a successful imitation, consumers are rebelling because of rising prices and the "Cheese Gang" steals regularly from the cavernous cheese storerooms.

Scarcely a week goes by without a nighttime raid by trucks driven out of the fog-shrouded plains surrounding Parma, police say.

The prize is Parmigiano Reggiano, commonly called Parmesan, the costly cheese which has tickled people's palates since Roman days.

Because of the insatiable appetite of most Italians for grated cheese on their spaghetti, Parmesan — fetching as much as $8 a pound — has developed into a billion-dollar business in Italy.

Banking on that appetite, speculators buy up stocks of the cheese while it's still maturing. Then, after the mandatory maturation period of 18 to 24 months, the speculators cash in for huge profits.

Trying to beat the middlemen, imitators outside the circumscribed production area of Parma, Modena, Reggio Emilia and Mantua have created an inexpensive look-alike cheese called Grana Padana. It matures faster than Parmesan by using chemicals rather than the enzymes from the linings of calves' stomachs.

In the last two years, converted cheese factories in 27 provinces up and down the Italian boot have been churning out the new Grana.

But thieves are also after a piece of the curd, hijacking trailer trucks or rolling the wheels of cheese out of the depositories with the complicity of "insiders," police say.

One typical night raid occurred last month, at the end of the April-November Parmesan production season, when thieves stole a big milk rig as driver Bruno Grassi ducked into a roadside men's room.

They dumped the load of milk cartons, drove the truck past electronic surveillance into the Consorzio Agrario storeroom and loaded more than 300 wheels of Parmesan, each weighing 77 pounds, in a couple of hours.

Their haul was worth more than $100,000.

More damaging than the weekly robberies has been a recent consumer rebellion against Parmesan prices. Since 1974, retail prices have tripled to about $8 a pound from about $2.40.

Many Italians switched to Grana from Parmesan, and as a result 45 per cent of the 1978 production — maturing for retail in 1980 — lies unsold in the storerooms. Parmesan thus earned the distinction of being one of the only food staples to drop in price.

The concern of the Parmese these days is how to get Italians and foreigners munching on Parmesan again.

Producers have started an advertising campaign urging new ways to eat the cheese, such as with pre-dinner drinks or for dessert rather than always grating it over spaghetti. They have also stepped up security at cheese depositories and are trying to eliminate the expensive middlemen.

China to join in arms talks

GENEVA (AP) — China plans to join the Geneva disarmament negotiations next year, United Nations officials said Tuesday.

They said the Chinese mission in Geneva said a Chinese delegate will take the seat held open for China in the Disarmament Committee. The negotiations resume Feb. 5.

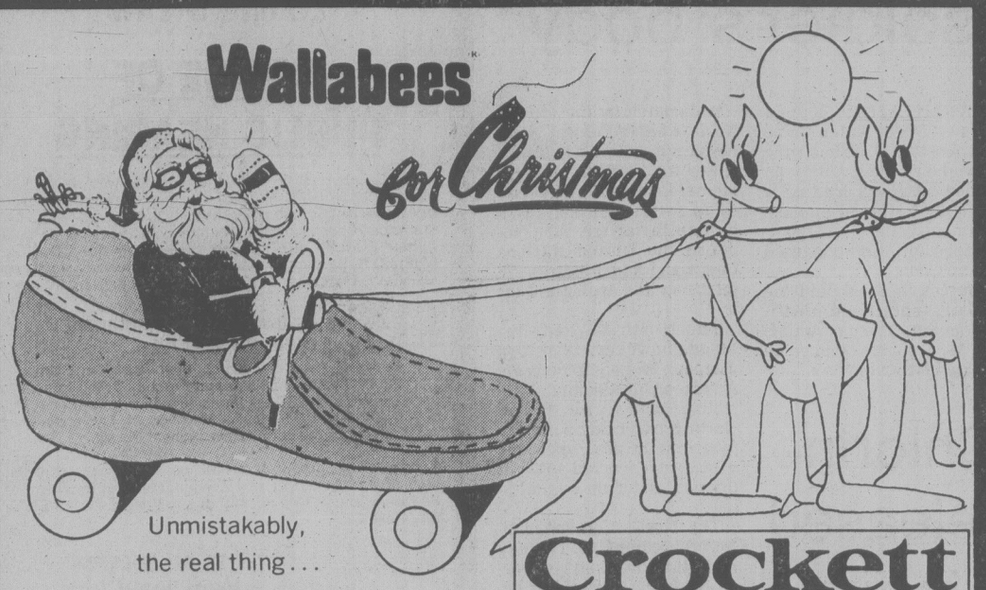

Among the subjects being discussed by the United States and the Soviet Union is a ban on ending all nuclear weapons tests.

First came the rats . . .

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — When the South Africans came, the rats came too. So the South Africans imported cats. Then there were too many of them, so the South Africans brought in more.

The ecological misadventure story began in 1947 when South Africa annexed Marion and Prince Edward Islands' 1,840 kilometres to the southeast and put a weather-observation station on Marion.

When the weathermen arrived, a number of rats slipped ashore and took up residence. It wasn't long before the meteorologists had lots of unwelcome rats for company.

Somebody thought of cats. In 1948, five common house cats were brought to the island and set free. They quickly ate their way through some of the rat population but also discovered it was easier to catch and eat the sea birds roosting on the island.

When they weren't out foraging, they were reproducing. By 1976, the feline population was estimated at 6,000, devouring 1.2 million birds a year. Petrels, graceful in the air but clumsy on the ground, were the favorite, but zoologists said other species also were endangered.

In 1976, 100 more cats were brought to Marion. But these were infected with feline enteritis. They were delivered by helicopter to selected areas of the island.

"The virus does not affect anything else, and that is why we decided to use it," said Rudi van Aarde of Pretoria University's Mammal Research Institute. "The virus has spread successfully through the island and has reduced the mean population by 54 per cent."

Now the zoologists are concerned that the 3,000 remaining cats, or some of their descendants, will produce a generation immune to the virus, and the population explosion will start all over again.

Shunned by church and family, a beaten Robert Bear gives in

By SCOTT MACLEOD

PLAINFIELD, Pa. (UPI) — For the seven years he has been "shunned" by the family he loves, Robert Bear has fought to be reunited with his wife and destroy the Reformed Mennonite Church that excommunicated him.

But now, after winning acquittal on a charge of abducting his wife, Bear will turn his attention to growing corn, cabbage, pumpkins and cantaloupes.

"(It) has been my main thrust up until now, to get my marriage and my family back," said Bear. "But if that is not going to be, I'll get busy and farm and live a quiet life among my neighbors."

Bear, 50, a robust man with a gentle voice, was discussing his future during a stroll alongside a harvested cornfield when he paused to look at the now-vacant farmhouse where he and his wife, Gale, 41, were married 21 years ago this week.

"Look, that's the Conodoguinet Creek!" Bear said, turning to the stream, then thinking of his six children. "We used to swim there in the summer and skate there in the winter. Even Gale said we had an idyllic life here together.

"Wasn't it Whittier," Bear continued, buttoning his green corduroy jacket against the chilly morning air, "who wrote, 'Life isn't all you want, but it's all you have?' Well, I'm now going to have it."

Bear was excomunicated June 11, 1972, because he criticized strict church doctrines and called church elders hypocrites for preaching one thing but doing another. With the excommunication came the church's order that Bear be "shunned" — ignored — by all church members, including his wife and six children.

Bear gave up the fight to win back his family after a Cumberland County jury of 12 non-Mennonites refused last week to convict him of abducting his wife, who in accordance with the church-ordered shun, has not acknowledged his existence for seven years.

Often breaking with emotion that moved jurors to tears, Bear pleaded he was attempting to force his wife home with him because the church destroyed their marriage with its 400-year-old shunning practice.

Although Bear's acquittal raised a question in the mind of his prosecutor of whether he would abduct his wife again — especially since he tried to force her home four other times, twice by smashing in her door with a sledge hammer — Bear says no.

"I believe she hates me," Bear said. "But no more again will I come. I don't want her to fear. As long as the Conodoguinet flows, I will not pick my wife up in my arms again."

Why is Bear willing to quit now, after waging a bitter war against the marriage-breaking practice of the church he believes is uniquely inhuman?

Bear said he was shaken by his wife's allegation in court — she testified he raped her after he was excommunicated but while they were still living under the same roof — and abhors a suggestion "there is rotteness in my bones."

Bear denied his wife's charge and said there was a biblical precedent for her behavior which indicated his wife was too far estranged to reason with.

Bear said he was moved because the jury placed its trust in his honesty by finding him not guilty of the false imprisonment and simple assault charges, and, apparently, agreed with him that shunning was immoral.

Finally, Bear was buoyed the trial received nationwide attention. He said that, more than anything else, would work to break down the strict imperatives of the Reformed Mennonite Church.

It was a significant victory for Bear's cause. In 1975, he lost a non-jury case in which he asked a judge to outlaw shunning. The court refused to get involved in religious freedom matters and Bear didn't have the money to appeal.

In last week's trial, Bear told a story of "a living torture of hell," declared that "only death will free me," and told of other Reformed Mennonites in his shoes who had committed suicide in despair.

Bear and his wife are still legally married, but she moved to another house 10 miles away and Bear lives in a sparsely furnished trailer parked in a far corner of his 300-acre farm.

Bear now plans to give up publishing an anti-Reformed Mennonite newspaper and pay more attention to his farm. It once grossed $150,000 a year, but has not prospered for seven seasons.

And while he will spend his 21st wedding anniversary and another Christmas alone, Bear said he would never give up hope that someday his family would come back.

It is especially in talking about his children, David, 19, Benjamin, 17, Patricia, 16, Rachel, 14, Susan, 12 and Sharon, 9, when Bear starts to weep.

"David was in the courtroom, but he would only grudgingly say hello to me," Bear recalled. "But someone told me that when I gave my closing argument, there were tears in his eyes.

"When there are tears," Bear said, "there can't be a stone heart. So that must mean there is some hope."

Retail sales up in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy demonstrated further resilience in November, further confounding predictions of a downturn.

Total sales at the U.S. retail stores rose 1.8 per cent to $77 billion in November, compared with a 1.7-per-cent drop in the previous month, the commerce department has announced.

The data on retail sales — an important component of the economy — came on the heels of a labor department report showing that the U.S. unemployment rate fell to 5.8 per cent last month from six per cent in October.

"You certainly don't get a picture of an economy that is folding up around us," said William Cox, a senior commerce department economist. "It seems as though this business expansion has nine lives, and I am not sure which one we are on."

The U.S. output fell sharply in the period from April through June, leading many economists in and out of government to conclude that a recession had begun.

50 YEARS OF FINE WINES

It's getting harder for Jamaicans to flee to Canada

KINGSTON, Jamaica (CP) — There's nothing in Bryan Springgay's casual dress or boy-like face to suggest any divine power.

But as acting director of the Canadian immigration office in Jamaica, Springgay, 32, helps designate the chosen people — those Jamaicans who will be allowed to migrate to Canada.

While the country's population numbers only about 2.5 million, Jamaicans represent the sixth-largest group of Canadian immigrants. More than 3,450 went to Canada in 1978.

While 1979 immigration figures aren't available, Springgay said his office approved approximately 219 applications in September, about average for a month. Only the United States accepts more Jamaicans.

"The number and our method of taking in immigrants (from all areas) are going to cause problems — too many too fast," he said in an interview.

Canada has been attempting to restrict over-all immigration but it has been difficult. About 72,475 were admitted in 1978. But one immigration official in Ottawa said Canada will likely welcome about 150,000 people this year, about 80,000 of them refugees.

From his air-conditioned office overlooking New Kingston, Springgay is spared a view of the Kingston slums but he is acutely aware of the wretched poverty of many Jamaicans.

Economy stagnant

"There's nothing to keep them here. You have about 30 per cent unemployment and a larger number under-employed. The whole Jamaican economy is stagnant."

The minimum wage is about $35 Jamaican, or about $20 U.S., a week. The per-capita income in 1978 was $981 U.S.

During a tour of a local supermarket, Springgay pointed to butter selling for $2.90 a pound and 300 grams of instant milk for about $3.

He said his 1979 Toyota cost about $36,000 here, about $24,000 Canadian. Gas sells for $3.85 (Jamaican) a gallon.

"They know what they have here and it's nothing, and they see the Jamaicans (from Canada) coming here for a holiday, and they've got cars and TV and it's Utopia."

If Jamaicans need any further reminder of how hard their lives are, they need only look at the relative affluence of the 530,462 North American and European tourists who visited the island in the last year.

Jamaicans emigrating to Canada leave with little more than a head full of dreams. They are not allowed to take any money with them but can take belongings such as furniture. "Most of them don't have anything that's worth taking," however.

Springgay said the cream of the crop have already left or hold a "safe haven" card allowing them to migrate to Canada or the U.S. when times get tough.

About 90 per cent of the Jamaicans going to Canada will settle in the Toronto area, he said.

Many of those trying to migrate now are poorly educated and have little idea what they are getting into. "They have no concept of cold. To them, it's when it hits 20 degrees celsius."

The migrants often add to the hardship of those they leave behind, particularly the large number of illegitimate children on the island.

"We'll often request a letter from a woman saying she is aware he (the father) is leaving and he'll supply enough maintenance," Springgay said. "We can't even legally do this."

Female tourists are sometimes the mark of charming Jamaican men looking for someone they can marry and use as a vehicle to get out. Springgay said he is aware of these "marriages of convenience" but as long as the woman is determined there is nothing he can do.

Route tightened

Jamaican women used to be able to get to Canada as domestics and obtain permanent status there but that route of escape has been tightened.

Springgay said some of these women may only be in their mid-20s but have five children to support. "As a permanent resident, we have to look at that. How is she going to support all those kids as a domestic?"

He defended the tough stand his office takes at times by explaining that Canada can't be expected to solve the world's hardships by simply accepting all needy people.

"Our job is to protect employment for Canadians, including landed immigrants. It's better to look after them in their own country, as opposed to taking them."

Petrol price defies gravity

By BRUCE LEVETT

LONDON (CP) — No matter now one spends it, the Canadian dollar does not go far in Britain these days — especially when it is spent on petrol.

Petrol is the generic name for gasoline, a commodity sold in Britain by the gallon, not in the litre as in Canada.

And right now the price ranges up to £1.50 for that gallon. In Canadian dollars, that is about $4.

In other words, should a vehicle have a 15-gallon tank, the price for filling that tank is about $60.

It does not sound all that much in pounds, of course, which is probably why the patient British do little more than mumble unhappily as they queue (line up) at the neighborhood pumps.

Granted, £1.50 is the extreme, however, the norm is already up about £1.30, which translates to $3.40 Canadian. That is pretty close to $1 a quart.

Garages all over Britain are running dry because of unofficial strikes by Shell and Esso tanker drivers.

Britain's largest independent petrol dealer is Heron — supplied by Shell — with 130 sites across the country. Up to 40 of them are dry.

Jeff Cohen, managing director, explains their price this way:

"Even when we close a site, we've still got to pay electricity, taxes and wages."

However Heron, like other outlets, have its customers' best interests at heart.

"Motorists have gone mad filling their tanks", Cohen says.

"This panic buying has made matters worse, so another reason for raising prices has been to discourge drivers from buying."

John Gilbert of Wimbledon is one motorist who would rather the petrol companies did not pay so much attention to his problem.

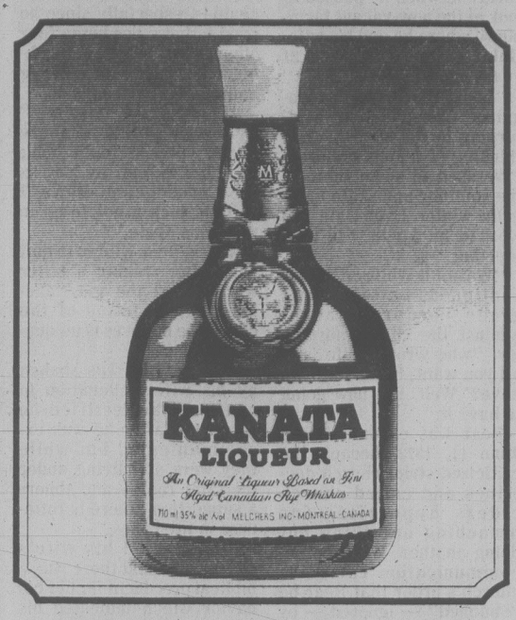

"It has got nothing to do with curbing demand," he says. "It has to do with making a quick killing."

Walter Johnson, Labor member of Parliament for Derby South, goes along with that, calling upon oil companies to "punish" profiteering garages by withholding supplies for a period when things get back to normal.

But what is normal? The price of gasoline, at the best, has jumped by 100 per cent in the last three years.

Whatever the reason, so far as gasoline is concerned, they are repealing the law of gravity.

"What goes up must come down," apparently does not apply to the price of petrol.

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A different type of solar energy will shower the world early next year when the 11-year sunspot cycle reaches a maximum and magnetic radiation from huge solar flares snarls Earth's radio communications.

While it may be a headache for lots of people, the sunspot maximum — which should peak in January and February — will be the best studied in history with solar physicists from 17 countries planning to participate in a co-ordinated observation effort that includes the latest technology.

In addition to fouling up radio transmissions, the strong electric field created by the solar blasts is expected to knock out power transformers as it has in the past. It also will produce dazzling displays of the aurora borealis, or "Northern Lights," which should be visible in much of the northern hemisphere.

Scientists think the key to understanding the sunspot cycle lies in understanding the magnetic fields which thread outward from the sunspots and shape the tenous gases of the sun's atmosphere.

David Rust, a solar physicist for American Science and Engineering, Inc., which manufactures x-ray telescopes used to study the sunspot activity,said data provided by NASA's Skylab mission show the process of "magnetic field reconnection" is taking place on the sun.

Magnetic reconnection is thought to be taking place constantly in the Earth's magnetosphere, but its role on the sun has been difficult to establish.

Rust said the Skylab pictures showed that widely separated sunspots and patches of surface magnetic fields were connected by magnetically trapped tubes of x-ray emitting gases.

As a result, Rust said, "We now know that magnetic fields bubbling to the sun's surface frequently reconnect with the magnetic fields of distant sunspots. In the course of many such reconnections, the solar fields evolve, helping us to understand how the 11-year cycle works."

From sunspot minimum to sunspot maximum, he said, the shape of the sun's corona evolves from one of relative symmetry, like the Earth's magnetosphere, to a jumble of hot clouds and tentacles, becoming most complex at the sunspot maximum.

Rust said some magnetic reconnections happen rapidly and seem to be associated with massive ejections of whole sections of the sun's atmosphere. When this happens, he said, shock waves resound through the solar system buffeting the earth's radio systems. Rust suggested this process is responsible for the largest solar flares.

Coffee export from Brazil cut

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — Brazil suspended all its coffee exports Monday for an indefinite period.

The Brazilian federal coffee agency (IBC), did not explain the reasons for the suspension. IBC sources said privately, however, that the suspension was ordered to give the agency time to implement unspecified measures to adjust coffee-export policies to the 30-per-cent devaluation of the cruzeiro ordered last weekend by the government. The devaluation took effect Tuesday.

The sources said no price changes are planned but that some modifications may be expected in the export taxes. The sources gave no details.

The exports suspension will probably be in effect for "a very, very brief period of time," said one source.

Brazil is the world's largest coffee exporter, and the United States is its main buyer.

Current minimum export prices and exports taxes for all grades of Brazilian coffee — green as well as instant — will remain in effect until a new policy is announced, the IBC said.

Budget's a wallet walloper

Other budget stories on pages 16, 17, 18, 20, 23

Higher gasoline prices because of a federal government tax increase will reverberate through the B.C. economy.

Simply put, it means we're all going to have to pay more for food and almost all consumer goods, say industry and labor spokesman.

Companies directly involved in transportation, including ferries, airlines, trains, buses and taxicabs, all face significantly higher costs.

The 18-cent increase in the price of a gallon of gas (15 cents for commercial transportation companies) will affect everything which is transported, heated or made from gasoline and oil.

And the $4 a barrel price hike for oil by Oct. 1, 1980, means that a whole range of products will zoom in price.

As an examples, that new living room carpet at $16.95 a square yard will be $19.66 in 12 months and as high as $26.10 by 1983 as price of oil continues to climb.

Vinyl floor coverings, counter tops, plastic garbage bags, ball-point pens, antifreeze, moulded plastic hockey skates, tape cassettes, all will cost more.

Paint for the living room that now sells for $21 a gallon will go up to $24 next year and will be close to $33 within three years.

R. J. Addington, president of Kelly Douglas, B.C.'s largest food wholesaler, said that the price of food is largely determined by the price of fuel.

"Raw materials have to be handled about 20 times, and each time transport is involved," Addington said.

Addington said there may be no immediate increase in the cost of food but prices will inevitably rise as the increased transportation costs add up.

B.C. Federation of Agriculture manager Ray Wessel said the agriculture industry is the highest user of fossil fuels in Canada with consumption approximately 20 per cent of the industry's cost of production.

"Aside from the direct cost to farmers, there will be a multiplier effect when you add in trucking and railway costs," he said.

He said what it means is that consumers will pay one way or the other for the increases and in some cases, it could mean more than just a 20 per cent increase in prices.

Wessel said southern Vancouver Island and Fraser Valley farmers who use oil or natural gas will be hardest hit.

Les Raphael, B.C. manager of the Retail Council of Canada, said the effect on the consumer "obviously is to eat his disposable income."

"(The gas hike) will probably go right through the economy," Raphael said. "The increase in the price of energy will increase prices. Then you have a reaction from the forces of labor to try to catch up. The thing is inflationary."

Raphael noted Finance Minister John Crosbie also announced that he is increasing domestic oil prices closer to world levels.

The move "may strengthen the Canadian dollar somewhat, which may make imports cheaper," he said, but a stronger Canadian dollar would make Canada's exports more expensive and less appealing to trading partners.

Vancouver-based tax consultant Nick Geer said transportation costs are a major factor in all consumer goods.

UNSPEAKABLE HORROR of higher gas prices hit home today for Gail Berry, of 243 Gorge Road East, when she stopped in at Parkdale Shell to fill up. She and every other driver awoke today to find price of a gallon of gas had jumped 25 cents, thanks to excise tax boost announced by Finance Minister John Crosbie. New price is only a start — we'll pay $1.90 a gallon by 1984.

The budget that stole Canada's Christmas

Times News Services

OTTAWA (CP) — The minority Progressive Conservative government's first budget came under searing attack today from opposition MPs, business leaders and politicians across the country.

Commons opposition members called it a mammoth revenue grab and 'the budget that stole Christmas.'

"It is a body blow to the Canadian people," said New Democratic Party finance critic Bob Rae.

Liberal Finance critic Herb Gray described it as Finance Minister John Crosbie's biggest joke yet.

"It is the a cruel joke on the Canadian people," he told the Commons moments after Crosbie read his first budget speech.

Debate on the budget was to begin today and an NDP vote of non-confidence condemning the budget will be held Thursday night. A similar vote instigated by a Liberal motion will not be held until the New Year.

All party leaders, even the Tory-supporting Social Crediter Fabien Roy, castigated the budget.

Roy said he disagrees with the whole budget, especially the 25-cent excise tax on gasoline. Roy said he might recommend rejection by his party in the Commons.

Without the support of Roy's five-member party, Clark's minority government could well go down to defeat.

Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau and NDP Leader Ed Broadbent called it regressive and said they will recommend their caucuses vote against it.

Gray said the budget is no budget at all. It was based on an oil and gas agreement that does not exist and an energy tax that does not exist.

Borrowing a phrase Crosbie used last week, Gray described the budget as a "squeasley, measley" offering to the Canadian public and said it would lead to a two-per-cent increase in inflation, an increase of one per cent in the unemployment rate and a one-point reduction in the Gross National Product.

The MP for Windsor West called the budget a revenue grab that the government is trying to disguise as a strategy for energy self-sufficiency.

"It is the budget that stole Christmas," Rae said. "It is a triumph of dogma over common sense."

Gray and Rae agreed that the Conservatives were overly concerned with cutting Canada's deficit and should be putting more emphasis on making sure Canadians are employed.

Trudeau said the government shows itself to obsessed with the size of the deficit to the extent that it is increasing inflation and unemployment.

He said increased oil prices and a surcharge on corporations' incomes will be passed on to the lower- and middle-income Canadians. These measures were a consequence of the government jamming through Parliament its legislation to allow deduction of mortgage interest and property tax from income tax.

To help home-owners the government had to raise $2.8 billion "but to pay for it they have to raise oil prices."

In Quebec, Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau slammed the new budget, calling on Ottawa to withdraw its excise tax on gasoline and hand over the field to Quebec.

In a statement to the national assembly, Parizeau said the budget effectively eliminates federalist arguments that Quebec benefits from Confederation.

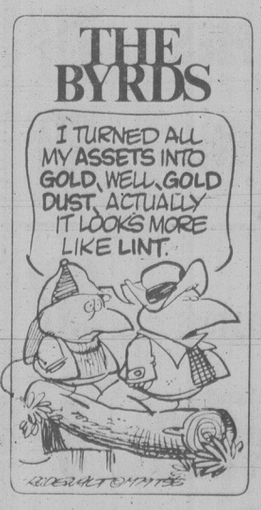

"What Quebec has not paid to the Ayatollahs, it will now have to pay to Ottawa."

Parizeau termed the budget "unjustified and damaging for the economic prosperity of all citizens. But it is particularly odious for Quebec."

The finance minister said he would introduce a motion

Dollar-a-gallon gas is old history as 'new era' budget hits hard

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Thousands of Canadians who raced for the gas pumps Tuesday in a last-minute frenzy to beat the federal budget today watched dollar-a-gallon gasoline disappear into history. The country woke up this morning to an 18-cent-a-gallon price hike, with further increases just months away.

Finance Minister John Crosbie also hit consumers in his first budget with increased taxes on cigarettes, liquor and wine.

It was a budget of few surprises, packed with tough measures to cure the country of its reputation as the worst gas-guzzler in the industrialized world.

"It is the first budget of a new era," Crosbie told the Commons as he unveiled his program to drag the country — kicking and screaming if necessary — out of its doldrums of serious unemployment, persistent inflation, profligate energy use and near-stagnation.

The measures the government promised to include in the budget to help ease the country into the painful age of expensive energy were there — but most remained either vague or well in the future.

The expected improvements in the country's home insulation program, for example, have not yet been negotiated with the provinces, although Crosbie is prepared to set aside the necessary funds.

And the single major relief measure in the budget, a tax refund designed to protect low and middle income Canadians from the brunt of soaring energy prices, does not come into effect until July, 1980. Even then, the tax break will be introduced at half-strength.

On paper, the government is offering a refundable energy tax credit to all families with annual incomes of less than $21,380 of $80 per adult and $30 per child.

In fact, however, the minimum any taxpayer can claim next year is half the credit. The government felt it could hold off introducing the measure until next summer, when consumers will first start to feel the impact of significant energy price jumps.

The budget confirmed that the government is determined to secure agreement with Alberta to raise the price of oil by $4 a barrel next year and $4.50 thereafter, but also made it clear that no such accord has so far been reached.

Crosbie, who has made no secret of his annoyance with the federal government's seeming inability to reach agreement with Alberta, reluctantly acknowledged that his budget had to be written on the assumption that the federal government will get its way.

But all that is firmly on paper at this point is that oil

Colombia quake toll rising

BOGOTA (AP) — A strong earthquake and resulting tidal waves wiped out a half-dozen villages along Colombia's southwest Pacific coast Wednesday, killing at least 118 persons, provincial authorities said. Many people were reported missing.

The pre-dawn quake, centred in the ocean off the Columbia-Ecuador border area, was felt 640 kilometres away in Quito, the Ecuadoran capital.

Thousands rushed from their beds in panic.

Officials said in radio-telephone reports they fear the toll of dead and injured will go much higher as rescue teams reach isolated vilages.

Among the hardest hit was the fishing village of Charco where at least 62 persons were killed and more than 350 injured, the police and Colombian fish and game officials said in radio-telephone reports. Most of the dead and injured were women and children, they said.

The majority of the houses in the town of 4,0[illegible] were built on stilts over a lake and were knocked into the water by the earthquake, the waves and aftershocks, the officials reported. About 70 per cent of the village's homes disappeared and the rest were heavily damaged, the officials said.

"It was terrible, it lasted nearly an hour," said a short-wave radio operator from Charco.

"Everything is knocked down," said Rev. Jose Pablo, a Roman Catholic priest reached in Charco. "The few houses that are left standing are seriously damaged."

Police in stricken areas called out auxiliaries and relief efforts were launched to help the homeless. Searchers poked through collapsed dwellings for survivors.

Twenty other towns in the area were rocked and the quake churned up two-metre waves that wrecked a pier on a prison island, officials said.

The quake measured from 7.7 to 8.1 on the Richter scale.

The San Francisco quake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the Richter scale.

Oil fear pushes gold to $451

LONDON (AP) — Gold hit a high of $451 an ounce in Zurich today as the U.S. dollar came under pressure on European money markets over fears of an increase in the oil price.

The metal opened in London and Zurich, Europe's major bullion markets, just below the previous all-time high of $447, recorded in London at the close of trading Tuesday.

But by lunchtime bullion had advanced to $451 in Zurich, where gold closed Tuesday at $445.50. London's major bullion houses "fixed" the price for the morning trading session at $449.75.

Fears of a 30-per-cent increase in the price of oil next week helped push gold up and depress the U.S. currency on European foreign exchanges. Gold is an investor's haven in times of monetary uncertainty.

In Tokyo, however, worries over oil seemed to have a reverse effect, and the dollar strengthened. Japan imports about 99 per cent of its oil and the yen tends to suffer more than the dollar amid gloomy oil news.

Although individual drivers will have to pay the higher levels, the increase "is going to be borne mostly by the businessman, and that will likely pass through the market to the consumer," he said.

Doug McLeod, president of Teamsters union Local 31 in Vancouver, forecasts higher truckers' costs.

"Companies are going to have to apply for higher freight tariffs to meet the cost," he said. "It's going to be a definite influence of the cost of the whole operation."

Teamsters are locked into a contract until the end of 1980 and cannot demand higher wages to compensate for the increased fuel costs, McLeod said.

Taxi rates will also have to go up as a result of the gasoline tax, Blue Bird manager Bruce Woodward said today.

"We can't absorb cost increases of that amount. They will have to be passed along to the customer."

He said the company would begin a study to see how much of an increase should be applied for but it was too early to predict when an application for a rate hike would go forward.

The measures will push up the cost of getting to work or going between cities by bus or train, truck or plane, as well as private car.

An increased tax on gasoline and diesel oil boosts the fuel bill for urban transit systems by about 15 per cent and for inter-city routes by about 25 per cent.

This compares with an average increase of about 18 per cent on gas for private cars.

Fuel costs will climb even higher in coming months under another program to raise oil prices in stages next month and in July and October.

Most public transport fares are subject to regulation — sometimes subsidized — by municipal, provincial or federal governments. But all fares are likely to go up soon under the pressure of higher operating costs.

For example, a 50-cent bus ticket might well jump to 55 cents or more.

Until Tuesday night's budget, public transport systems generally were not required to pay the existing federal excise tax of seven cents a gallon on gasoline.

The new budget removes the exemption for buses, trucks, railways, planes, ships and vehicles run by provincial or municipal governments.

Municipalities will get a rebate of 10 cents a gallon on fuel for public transit buses, but that still leaves a 15-cent levy.

Also eligible for the 10-cents-a-gallon rebate are farmers and fishermen, when the gasoline or disel fuel is used for farming or commercial fishing.

The government says it will collect an estimated $2.5 billion a year from the increased fuel taxes for commercial and private vehicles.

Victoria gasoline prices will start at $1.31 in January and rise to $1.89 by July, 1983.)

Comparable New York rates at the same stages are given as $1.48 next month, $1.53 next summer, $1.58 a year from January and $1.93 in July, 1983.

The system of applying the excise tax is changed from a set number of cents a gallon to a percentage of the wholesale value — nine per cent.

The immediate impact amounts to only a tiny fraction of a cent per gallon, but it means the tax will rise in step with oil price increases scheduled for the next four years.

The budget delivers a double tax blow to purchasers of aircraft used for aerial photography, flying training, parachute jumping and recreation.

In addition to the higher fuel prices, purchasers of planes for these purposes will be subject for the first time to the nine-per-cent federal sales tax levied on manufactured goods.

Airplanes used exclusively for public transport of people or freight remain exempt from the sales tax.

Personal and corporate aircraft remain subject to the tax.

in the national assembly calling on Ottawa to abandon its 25-cent-a-gallon excise tax on gasoline.

Liberal Leader Claude Ryan said he was against the 300 per cent increase in the excise tax. "It's enormous. We deplore it along with the government."

One man who had kind words for the Tory budget was Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta.

Lougheed praised federal Finance Minister John Crosbie's courage in attacking the massive $10-billion federal deficit

"The defict has an effect on all of us in Canada," Lougheed told a news conference. "This budget will help strengthen the Canadian dollar."

The Alberta premier acknowledged the four-cents-per-litre increase in the price of gasoline would be a bitter pill to swallow. But it was time Canadians realized that a more "realistic" oil price was necessary to ensure self-sufficiency and to give the producing provinces fair return on their resources.

"There are no surprises in the budget. It reflects the fall agreement on energy pricing."

Spokesmen for Canadian oil companies were not as enthusiastic as Lougheed.

Most expressed disappointment at the budget, saying its energy proposals make it impossible to achieve self-sufficiency by 1990.

Spokesmen for the larger, mainly foreign-owned companies, however, had stronger criticism than representatives of smaller companies.

Fraser Allen, chairman of the Canadian Petroleum Association, which represents about 180 larger firms, said "it would appear the government has decided to focus on general revenue requirements at the expense of self-sufficiency."

Despite a realistic approach to the need for oil-price increases, the budget's taxation measures contradict the stated goal of 1990 self-sufficiency, Allen said.

In Ottawa, the government budget announcement of a five-per-cent corporate surtax drew a mixed reaction from Sam Hughes, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

"In a nutshell, we don't like it," he told reporters. "The timing is wrong because this is the time when business should be setting money aside to invest in new plant and equipment.

"But we are prepared as a business community to play our part in fighting inflation."

Game, set, match at Racquet Club?

By PAUL MINVIELLE

Life was simpler in 1886, and the genteel folk who formed a club to play pit-a-pat with racquet and ball would no doubt be baffled by the problems of their 20th century counterparts who belong to the Racquet Club of Victoria.

It was called the Victoria Lawn Tennis Club in those happier days when the clubhouse was on Belcher — now Rockland Avenue — between Cook and Vancouver.

There were changes over the years, including the name, which became the Victoria Lawn Tennis and Badminton Club.

In 1910, the club moved to 1920 Foul Bay Road to a building which was demolished in 1966 to make way for the shopping centre that now stands there.

The club stayed for 57 years, and club stories tended to stay on the sports pages where the members wanted to see news of what was happening at the club.

But in the heady days of 1966, with visions of Expo dancing in Canadian heads, the Racquet Club of Victoria (another name change had occurred) approved plans for a modern $750,000 complex on a 6.5-acre site at McKenzie Avenue and Gordon Head Road.

The decision — it seemed liked an extension of halcyon days — would actually lead to more than a decade of financial grief.

On Nov. 2, 1966, then Saanich reeve Hugh Curtis turned the sod for the new building, and a year later it opened.

Officials commented about how well the project had progressed.

As it turned out, it wasn't a portent of the future.

A hint of future woes can be found in the Times of Sept. 23, 1970, in a story telling of Victoria city council's finance committee decision to turn down a request for a $60 grant for a permanent trophy and four miniature trophies on the grounds that it was "a rich man's club."

It was among the first pilgrimages for municipal money club officials were to make, and later attempts, often for tens of thousands of dollars, were to meet with the same lack of success.

Despite the vigorous protests of club officials over the years that club members were mostly middle-class citizens who had to give up a lot of other things to be able to afford to join the RCV, it never lost the image and the label that it was for monied folk.

It was certainly never a rich club — club treasurer Ian Cairns told the Racquet Club of Victoria Holdings members Monday night the club had operated in the black in only one of the last 13 years.

Checking newspaper files for those 13 years is a repetitious procedure.

The club returned time and again to Saanich council in an attempt to get relief from its tax burden.

After council refused to help in 1971, the club suggested it might have to build a highrise apartment building on the site to balance its books.

Some aldermen considered the comment a threat, and reminded club officials they'd still have to come to council for rezoning permission.

The antagonistic attitude was to prevail right through the 70s.

There was temporary relief in 1973 when the club sold 2½ acres of its property for $330,000.

In 1977, an unnamed entrepreneur offered to buy the club. But nothing came of the suggestion.

That was the year taxes soared from $25,000 to $64,000 while membership had dwindled from 900 to 600.

Incredibly, it was in the same year that rumors of the club being for sale were squelched by club vice-president Glenn Anderson.

The club is now the healthiest it's ever been and out of the dire financial straits it appeared to be in because of a successful membership drive, Anderson said.

"The financial situation has taken care of itself by the increased membership."

An earlier membership drive had flopped.

In January, 1978, the assessed value of the club was reduced from $450,000 to $100.

That was good news while it lasted but the province and Saanich council both reacted angrily and the case was appealed.

By June, the word was out — the club would have to pay its full taxes.

It was when the reduced assessment was first in the news that the club was criticized by the president of the Saanich Community Club, who said that if the Racquet Club wasn't run on a businesslike basis, the public shouldn't be expected to pick up the tab.

It was the advent of new municipally-owned recreation centres that put the squeeze on Racquet Club membership.

In August of this year, club officials were saying the future was much brighter, thanks to a tax break from the assessment appeal board, a successful membership debenture drive and a determined attitude by members.

Following Monday night's meeting when the decision was made to dispose, lease or otherwise do something with its assets, the club's troubled past is matched only by its uncertain future.

Sturrock heads purchase study

Saanich Ald. Howard Sturrock was named Tuesday to head a committee to look into the possible acquisition of the Racquet Club of Victoria.

His appointment was announced by Mayor Mel Couvelier after club shareholders voted Monday to authorize directors to sell, lease or otherwise dispose of club assets.

Sturrock's terms of reference are to:

Examine the possibility of financial assistance from senior governments.

Come up with a projection of the annual operating deficit under municipal administration.

Study the impact on other Saanich neighborhoods relating to an imbalance of recreation facilities in the Gordon Head area.

max low

Less than two weeks to the magic hour and, as the countdown begins, our thoughts really start to zero in on cards, presents and puddings.

Puddings, you say? Of course, but while they're cooking we'll get on with the rest of the pre-Christmas chores.

Very first card I received was a pretty blue one from the Motor-Vehicle Branch. Oh no, how much do they want or what have I done now? They were the initial reactions but inside was a greeting which said: "Gently does it this holiday season."

Safe-driving tips the branch hoped I'd pass on to readers as a service to my community included replacing old windshield wiper blades, never mixing regular snow tires with radials, carrying a bag of sand and a shovel in the trunk, and packing a survival kit in there, too, with a warm blanket and an extra coat.

And tucked inside the card was a word of wisdom:

"Brake gently in all hazardous winter driving conditions and you'll arrive safe and more relaxed."

Present-buying has become the biggest headache. What to buy, whether it will fit and whether we've spent enough obsess us at this time of year.

Many have long felt that too much emphasis has been placed on spending at Christmas and one reader, a senior citizen with three families here in Victoria (three ... grandchildren and a couple of great grandchildren) phoned with a different idea.

"I've told all those in my family not to give me expensive gifts and I've decided that for every dollar I spend on Christmas, I'm going to give a dollar to charity," the woman said.

She criticized the ridiculous idea that you "have to go out and spend this horrible lot of money" but she said it isn't something new.

"However, it is something that's got more horrendous because of inflation," the caller pointed out. "And, as you look around the world you realize our own Christmas trees are an embarrassment."

People feel in a bind, the woman said. They feel they have to go out and buy these expensive things, but they don't.

"We must all return to the basics of small token gifts, wrapped and put by the tree," she added. "People have to realize they still can give simpler gifts and that the important thing is not to go out and buy presents because you need to but because you'd like to."

Back to the puddings, which Virginia Careless of the Provincial Museum's history division was dishing up the other night at the Newcombe Auditorium. Christmas puds they were, complete with a delicious lemon sauce. Really!

They were gobbled up at the end of a rather unusual talk by Virginia on festive treats of Victoria's Christmas past.

Most people probably believe there is only one kind of Christmas or plum pudding but this just isn't so, said Virginia. In the "past" which she researched (1861 to the early 1900s) there were many kinds of steamed puddings which were eaten all through the year. One book printed in the 19th Cent... offered 220 pudding recipes.

"The trouble is, the only time most people have tasted ste... is at Christmas when they are already stuffed!" said Virginia.

And that brings us to another seasonal problem — over indulgence.

When thinking not only of driving but of many things from presents to puddings, the Motor-Vehicle Branch's message "Gently does it this holiday season" could be good advice to follow.

Remembering for a moment that Christmas is meant to celebrate Christ's birthday, "gentle" is such a beautiful word . . .

Tonight's the last chance to get liquor at old prices

If you want to lay in your Christmas liquor supply at the old prices you will have to shop tonight.

The 208 liquor stores in B.C. have been ordered to take an inventory of their stock and new prices are expected to be tacked on Thursday.

Liquor board officials are huddling in Vancouver to work out the new price schedule following Finance Minister John Crosbie's announcement Tuesday in his budget speech that federal taxes on liquor, tobacco and gasoline have been increased.

While the gasoline tax hike of 18 per cent has had a clear cut impact — motorists this morning woke up to find the litre price of gas four to five cents higher — the effect of the tax increases on liquor and tobacco is not immediately known.

One local tobacco wholesaler said he doubted there would be any change in price until new stocks start rolling in. There is about a week's supply in Victoria and until that is depleted prices will be unchanged.

The federal government will be taking 2.5 cents more tax on a package of 20 cigarettes and 15.7 cents more on a pound of tobacco. But the distributors are expected to tack on an additional charge of their own.

A Victoria retailer felt it will mean smokers will have to pay about five cents more per package of 20, bringing the price to 93-to 95 cents.

In addition there is a manufacturer's increase on tobacco products due to come into effect Jan. 1. That will bring the price of a package of 20 cigarettes to between 98 cents to $1.

Crosbie estimated the government will increase its revenue during the first year by $130 million for alcohol products and by $85 million for tobacco products because of the changes.

Taxes on hard liquor, except for brandy, rise by 11 cents per 25-ounce bottle. The price of regular beer will rise by 24 cents per case of 24 while the cost of light beer goes up by 12 cents per 24. The tax on malt beer, however, drops by 12 cents per case of 24.

The average 25-ounce bottle of table wine, with an alcohol content between seven and 14 per cent, will increase by 13.3 cents.

The price of a bottle of wine with an alcohol content less than seven per cent rises by 6.2 cents. Bottles of wine with an alcohol content exceeding 14 per cent increase by 43.9 cents.

Bottles of sparkling wine will decrease by more than $1 a gallon. They are now taxed at the rate of $2.55 a gallon, regardless of alcohol content. They now will be taxed at the same rates as still wines.

Crosbie said the changes mean equal levels of alcoholic content in spirits, wine and beer will be taxed equally.

Sticky situation

City police are sinking their teeth into an offbeat break-in at Viteway Bakery, 753 View, early today.

But it's nothing compared to what the thief — probably on the young side — found to chew on.

Officers found the front window of the bakery had been smashed and called the shop owner.

The owner did a quick inventory and reported the loss — a case of apricot chewy bars.

Injunction talk on chimneys

Fireplace equipment industry representatives were to meet with Fire Commissioner Gordon Anderson in Vancouver today to appeal his ban on ... clearance fireplaces.

If the appeal fails, the industry is contemplating going to court to apply for an injunction, a spokesman said.

Anderson's ban, announced Friday, created widespread controversy and confusion over the safety of the metal fireplace units.

Anderson said Tuesday he will recommend all building inpsectors in the province stop issuing permits for the installation of the units.

"I believe (they are) a hazard and I feel a responsibility to the people of British Columbia to inform them of that hazard," he said in an interview from Vancouver.

However, the major consumer testing organization which has certified them has denied they represent any danger.

"We tested them. If we had found them dangerous we would not have put our name on them," Reg Wright, Underwriters Laboratories of Canada spokesman, said.

Wright said his organization has had more complaints and problems with the traditional fireplace system.

"In the great majority of instances they are doing a great job if they are cleaned, inspected and maintained properly," he said. "If you fill your stove at night and let it go and do this day after day, however, there may be trouble."

But Commissioner Anderson said he has many examples of the chimneys failing, ...ging over a number of brands of pipe.

There is no single feature of the ... which fail, but the pr... generally fall into three categories — corrosion on the outer surface of the inside pipe in the twin-piped design, creosote buildup on the surface and poor quality control in the manufacture of some pipes.

Anderson's ban, endorsed by fire chiefs throughout the province, has provincial government officials pondering the legal force of such a ruling.

The building standards branch in the municipal affairs department, which acted with Anderson in revoking provincial approval, referred a reporter's inquiry to the attorney-general's department, which referred it back to the fire commissioner.

There seems to be no question that the commissioner has the authority ... do what he did under provincial legis... there is uncertainty about how it conflicts with the National Building Code and other provincial and federal legislation.

The underwriters laboratory is re-examining its standards for evaluating the chimneys and fireplaces cited by Anderson, but they are still accepted under the code and by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. for CMHC-funded housing projects.

A possible clash could come when a developer or homeowner demands a building permit for the installation of such an appliance and he is refused by the inspector.

Budget's a wallet walloper

Higher gasoline prices because of a federal government tax increase will reverberate through the B.C. economy.

Simply put, it means we're all going to have to pay more for food and almost all consumer goods, say industry and labor spokesmen.

Companies directly involved in transportation, including ferries, airlines, trains, buses and taxicabs, all face significantly higher costs.

The 18-cent increase in the price of a gallon of gas (15 cents for commercial transportation companies) will affect everything which is transported, heated or made from gasoline and oil.

And the $4 a barrel price hike for oil by Oct. 1, 1980, means that a whole range of products will zoom in price.

As an example, that new living room carpet at $16.95 a square yard will be $19.66 in 12 months and as high as $26.10 by 1983 as price of oil continues to climb.

Vinyl floor coverings, counter tops, plastic garbage bags, ball-point pens, antifreeze, moulded plastic hockey skates, tape cassettes, all will cost more.

Paint for the living room that now sells for $21 a gallon will go up to $24 next year and will be close to $33 within three years.

R. J. Addington, president of Kelly Douglas, B.C.'s largest food wholesaler, said that the price of food is largely determined by the price of fuel.

"Raw materials have to be handled about 20 times, and each time transport is involved," Addington said.

Addington said there may be no immediate increase in the cost of food but prices will inevitably rise as the increased transportation costs add up.

B.C. Federation of Agriculture manager Ray Wessel said the agriculture industry is the highest user of fossil fuels in Canada with consumption approximately 20 per cent of the industry's cost of production.

"Aside from the direct cost to farmers, there will be a multiplier effect when you add in trucking and railway costs," he said.

He said what it means is that consumers will pay one way or the other for the increases and in some cases, it could mean more than just a 20 per cent increase in prices.

Wessel said southern Vancouver Island and Fraser Valley farmers who use oil or natural gas will be hardest hit.

Les Raphael, B.C. manager of the Retail Council of Canada, said the effect on the consumer "obviously is to eat his disposable income."

"(The gas hike) will probably go right through the economy," Raphael said. "The increase in the price of energy will increase prices. Then you have a reaction from the forces of labor to try to catch up. The thing is inflationary."

Raphael noted Finance Minister John Crosbie also announced that he is increasing domestic oil prices closer to world levels.

The move "may strengthen the Canadian dollar somewhat, which may make imports cheaper," he said, but a stronger Canadian dollar would make Canada's exports more expensive and less appealing to trading partners.

Vancouver-based tax consultant Nick Geer said transportation costs are a major factor in all consumer goods.

UNSPEAKABLE HORROR of higher gas prices hit home today for Gail Berry, of 243 Gorge Road East, when she stopped in at Parkdale Shell to fill up. She and every other driver awoke today to find price of a gallon of gas had jumped 18 cents, thanks to excise tax boost announced by Finance Minister John Crosbie. New price is only a start — we'll pay $1.90 a gallon by 1984.

The budget that stole Canada's Christmas

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The minority Progressive Conservative government's first budget came under searing attack today from opposition MPs, business leaders and politicians across the country.

Commons opposition members called it a mammoth revenue grab and 'the budget that stole Christmas.'

"It is a body blow to the Canadian people," said New Democratic Party finance critic Bob Rae.

Liberal Finance critic Herb Gray described it as Finance Minister John Crosbie's biggest joke yet.

"It is a cruel joke on the Canadian people," he told the Commons moments after Crosbie read his first budget speech.

Debate on the budget was to begin today and an NDP vote of non-confidence condemning the budget will be held Thursday night. A similar vote instigated by a Liberal motion will not be held until the New Year.

All party leaders, even the Tory-supporting Social Crediter Fabien Roy, castigated the budget.

Roy said he disagrees with the whole budget, especially the 25-cent excise tax on gasoline. Roy said he might recommend rejection by his party in the Commons.

Without the support of Roy's five-member party, Clark's minority government could well go down to defeat.

Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau and NDP Leader Ed Broadbent called it regressive and said they will recommend their caucuses vote against it.

Gray said the budget is no budget at all. It was based on an oil and gas agreement that does not exist and an energy tax that does not exist.

Borrowing a phrase Crosbie used last week, Gray described the budget as a "squeasley, measley" offering to the Canadian public and said it would lead to a two-per-cent increase in inflation, an increase of one per cent in the unemployment rate and a one-point reduction in the Gross National Product.

The MP for Windsor West called the budget a revenue grab that the government is trying to disguise as a strategy for energy self-sufficiency.

"It is the budget that stole Christmas," Rae said. "It is a triumph of dogma over common sense."

Gray and Rae agreed that the Conservatives were overly concerned with cutting Canada's deficit and should be putting more emphasis on making sure Canadians are employed.

Trudeau said the government shows itself to obsessed with the size of the deficit to the extent that it is increasing inflation and unemployment.

He said increased oil prices and a surcharge on corporations' incomes will be passed on to the lower- and middle-income Canadians. These measures were a consequence of the government jamming through Parliament its legislation to allow deduction of mortgage interest and property tax from income tax.

To help home-owners the government had to raise $2.8 billion "but to pay for it they have to raise oil prices."

In Quebec, Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau slammed the new budget, calling on Ottawa to withdraw its excise tax on gasoline and hand over the field to Quebec.

In a statement to the national assembly, Parizeau said the budget effectively eliminates federalist arguments that Quebec benefits from Confederation.

"What Quebec has not paid to the Ayatollahs, it will now have to pay to Ottawa."

Parizeau termed the budget "unjustified and damaging for the economic prosperity of all citizens. But it is particularly odious for Quebec."

The finance minister said he would introduce a motion

Dollar-a-gallon gas is old history as 'new era' budget hits hard

OTTAWA — Thousands of Canadians who raced for the gas pumps Tuesday in a last-minute frenzy to beat the federal budget today watched dollar-a-gallon gasoline disappear into history. The country woke up this morning to an 18-cent-a-gallon price hike, with further increases just months away.

Finance Minister John Crosbie also hit consumers in his first budget with increased taxes on cigarettes, liquor and wine.

It was a budget of few surprises, packed with tough measures to cure the country of its reputation as the worst gas-guzzler in the industrialized world.

"It is the first budget of a new era," Crosbie told the Commons as he unveiled his program to drag the country — kicking and screaming if necessary — out of its doldrums of serious unemployment, persistent inflation, profligate energy use and near-stagnation.

The measures the government promised to include in the budget to help ease the country into the painful age of expensive energy were there — but most remained either vague or well in the future.

The expected improvements in the country's home insulation program, for example, have not yet been negotiated with the provinces, although Crosbie is prepared to set aside the necessary funds.

And the single major relief measure in the budget, a tax refund designed to protect low and middle income Canadians from the brunt of soaring energy prices, does not come into effect until July, 1980. Even then, the tax break will be introduced at half-strength.

On paper, the government is offering a refundable energy tax credit to all families with annual incomes of less than $21,380 of $80 per adult and $30 per child.

In fact, however, the minimum any taxpayer can claim next year is half the credit. The government felt it could hold off introducing the measure until next summer, when consumers will first start to feel the impact of significant energy price jumps.

The budget confirmed that the government is determined to secure agreement with Alberta to raise the price of oil by $4 a barrel next year and $4.50 thereafter, but also made it clear that no such accord has so far been reached.

Crosbie, who has made no secret of his annoyance with the federal government's seeming inability to reach agreement with Alberta, reluctantly acknowledged that his budget had to be written on the assumption that the federal government will get its way.

But all that is firmly on paper at this point is that oil

Colombia quake toll rising

BOGOTA (AP) — A strong earthquake and resulting tidal waves wiped out a half-dozen villages along Colombia's southwest Pacific coast Wednesday, killing at least 118 persons, provincial authorities said. Many people were reported missing.

The pre-dawn quake, centred in the ocean off the Columbia-Ecuador border area, was felt 640 kilometres away in Quito, the Ecuadoran capital.

Thousands rushed from their beds in panic.

Officials said in radio-telephone reports they fear the toll of dead and injured will go much higher as rescue teams reach isolated vilages.

Among the hardest hit was the fishing village of Charco where at least 62 persons were killed and more than 350 injured, the police and Colombian fish and game officials said in radio-telephone reports. Most of the dead and injured were women and children, they said.

The majority of the houses in the town of 4,000 were built on stilts over a lake and were knocked into the water by the earthquake, the waves and aftershocks, the officials reported. About 70 per cent of the village's homes disappeared and the rest were heavily damaged, the officials said.

"It was terrible, it lasted nearly an hour," said a short-wave radio operator from Charco.

"Everything is knocked down," said Rev. Jose Pablo, a Roman Catholic priest reached in Charco. "The few houses that are left standing are seriously damaged."

Police in stricken areas called out auxiliaries and relief efforts were launched to help the homeless. Searchers poked through collapsed dwellings for survivors.

Twenty other towns in the area were rocked and the quake churned up two-metre waves that wrecked a pier on a prison island, officials said.

The quake measured from 7.7 to 8.1 on the Richter scale.

The San Francisco quake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the Richter scale.

Oil fear pushes gold to $451

LONDON (AP) — Gold hit a high of $451 an ounce in Zurich today as the U.S. dollar came under pressure on European money markets over fears of an increase in the oil price.

The metal opened in London and Zurich, Europe's major bullion markets, just below the previous all-time high of $447, recorded in London at the close of trading Tuesday.

But by lunchtime bullion had advanced to $451 in Zurich, where gold closed Tuesday at $445.50. London's major bullion houses "fixed" the price for the morning trading session at $449.75.

Fears of a 30-per-cent increase in the price of oil next week helped push gold up and depress the U.S. currency on European foreign exchanges. Gold is an investor's haven in times of monetary uncertainty.

In Tokyo, however, worries over oil seemed to have a reverse effect, and the dollar strengthened. Japan imports about 99 per cent of its oil and the yen tends to suffer more than the dollar amid gloomy oil news.

Jetfoil: nice ride but no answers

By AL FORREST

Provincial Transport Minister Alex Fraser and investor Sam Bawlf were whizzed across Juan de Fuca strait in a Boeing jetfoil Tuesday afternoon but the voyage ended with them no closer to an agreement.

Fraser said the jetfoil is "an exciting new mode of transportation" but it was up to private enterprise to get something going, such as a route between Victoria and Seattle.

Bawlf, in a separate interview, said that's all very well but private enterprise can't afford to operate the run without government help.

"The Marguerite was operating on a 50 per cent subsidy," he said. "How could private enterprise compete with that?"

Investors must know the ground rules, especially in what ways the government will be competing with subsidized service. Investors will also want to know in what ways the government might provide help.

In the middle is Robin Little, Boeing's marketing manager for North America, who can't get action out of either side.

"We keep coming up here but they seem to be no closer to a decision. It's frustrating."

The event was a demonstration ride for local officials and members of the press, organized by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce.

A dozen Norwegian businessmen had made the trip up from Seattle aboard the Flying Princess in two hours, less than half the time of the Marguerite, and the jetfoil was available for a test run in the afternoon.

The double-decker craft, which seats 250, was a bit bumpy leaving the Inner Harbor, while riding hullborne in the water. The effect was like riding a horse.

But once out in the strait, with foils extended down, lifting the hull out of the water, the vessel took off at 43 knots, the equivalent of the highway speed of 80 kilometres per hour. The hull rode above most of the waves, creating only an occasional bump.

Many of the guests crowded into the front of the lower deck to get the sensation of speed over rough waters.

Incoming chamber president Cedric Steele called it "an exciting way to travel."

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber also rated it "highly enjoyable."

Meanwhile, Bawlf persisted with the economics of jetfoils.

B.C. Ferries faces expenditures of $1 billion in the 1980s, for subsidies, new terminals and vessels, he said.

A single $10 million jetfoil could do the work of a $40 million ferry in terms of transportating people, but not cars.

It makes sense to encourage low-cost spending on jetfoils to deal with increasing loads, he said.

For example, a downtown-to-downtown jetfoil trip between Vancouver and Nanaimo would take only an hour, compared with the downtown-to-downtown time for B.C. Ferries of about three hours.

But the jetfoil can't compete on price under the present subsidy system.

Bawlf said the next move is up to the provincial government.

Extension hits 50 properties

A Saanich alderman's claim that 30 homes will be demolished and another 20 properties affected in some way by the proposed McKenzie Avenue extension is correct, a highways ministry spokesman confirmed today.

Senior information officer Ray Baines said the planned four-laning of McKenzie to link the Trans-Canada and Pat Bay highways will affect about 50 properties along the edge of the right-of-way.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier decided Tuesday to call a special meeting and have a second look at the planned extension. Earlier this year council approved preliminary drawings for the arterial route.

Ald. Bob Cameron asked for the special meeting after telling the public works committee Tuesday that 30 homes will be sacrificed for the extension.

Municipal engineer Cliff Warren said at the meeting he believes only about 20 homes will be torn down to make way for the highway.

Baines said the number is closer to 30 and that another 20 properties will have "corners nicked off."

Ald. Irene Block said no mention was made of the number of properties affected during a closed meeting with ministry officials in July.

Cameron said he has other evidence that might persuade council members the extension isn't necessary.

Flues low on risk list

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Faults in electrical wiring and appliances continue to be the major causes of fires in Canada, according to the Insurance Bureau of Canada.

Careless smoking is a close second while defective and overheated chimneys and flues, so much in the news these days, rank among the least of all causes.

The seventh edition of Facts of the General Insurance Industry, published by the IBC, reveals faulty wiring and appliances caused 15,532 of the 74,043 fires across Canada in 1977 for a loss of $114.4 million.

There were 12,680 fires caused by careless smoking and only 482 from defective and overheated chimneys and flues. The losses were $53 million and $2.5 million respectively.

The Facts book also notes the number of fires attributed to arson is climbing as is the number of fires of undetermined origin.

In 1977 there were 8,957 arsons resulting in a loss of just under $100 million, and 14,688 fires where the cause could not be determined and which lead to losses of $151 million.

The total fire loss for the year was $571.6 million.

The IBC statistical summary shows the insurance industry in Canada wrote nearly $6 billion worth of premiums in 1978, a more than 400 per cent increase over the past 10 years.

Automobile premiums totalled $2.8 billion, property insurance premiums, $2.3 billion and liability premiums, $443.9 million.

It was the first time in many years the automobile sector was less than 50 per cent of total general insurance premiums. In 1977 auto premiums accounted for 53 per cent of all premiums; in 1978, 47 per cent.

A major reason for the drop in auto insurance premiums—they hit $3 billion in 1977 — was the introduction of a government compensation system in Quebec covering personal injuries, the IBC says.

The Facts book points out a marked growth in property insurance. Ten years ago total premiums were only $397 million.

Profits, too, have increased with the industry chalking up its best year ever in 1978 — showing a combined investment and underwriting income of $561 million.

That was an increase of $106 million over the previous year and $150 million over 1976.

The most significant development has been in underwriting income. In the early part of the decade the industry suffered small losses in this sector. By 1974 the losses totalled $266 million.

By 1977 the picture had changed completely with the industry recording a profit of $47 million.

$500 GRANT
HOMES BUILT PRIOR TO 1961

As of April 20, 1979, the federal government has increased the Canadian Home Insulation Program (CHIP) grant to $500 on all homes built prior to 1961. (100% of materials to a maximum of $350 and 33% of labor to a maximum of $150.) If you qualify, why wait! You now have up to $500 towards your bill. Our estimating staff will help you with your grant forms to assure that you receive the maximum grant available.

NORAD tests slated

The North American Air Defence Command (NORAD) was to begin early-morning exercises today to test aerospace warning and defence systems along the west coasts of Canada and the U.S.

The exercise continues early Thursday and, if weather causes a delay today, from 4 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Friday.

NORAD fighter interceptors will scramble to intercept enemy planes attempting to penetrate the radar defence screen. About 200 aircraft from the Canadian Forces Air Defence Group, U.S. Aerospace Defence Command, Strategic Air Command, Tactical Air Command, Air National Guard, Pacific Command and Marine Corps will take part.

Canadian forces personnel from 409 All Weather Fighter Squadron of CFB Comox, Canadian Forces Station Baldy Hughes near Prince George, CFS Kamloops and CFS Holberg on Vancouver Island are involved in the exercise.

A "nugget" of information:

Majority control of B.C. mining is in Canadian hands.

Foreign investment is important to B.C.'s mining industry, helping to develop new mines and create more jobs for British Columbians. But the dominant factor is still Canadian...with 55% of the control of B.C. mining operations in Canadian hands.* Mining development in B.C. is proceeding at a strong, steady rate...and it's happening in a way that benefits our province and our country.
